Sapphires and Diamonds

by DOROTHY TROWBRIDGE

CHAPTER V
Peggy looked at the gate waiting to open for her. His little white shirt tails flapped in the breeze above the patched pants that had once belonged to an older brother. His white teeth in his black setting shone in the sunlight. She waved the light whip towards him as she drove through the gate.

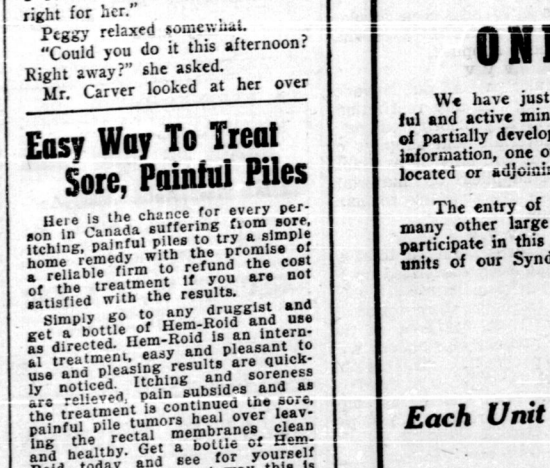

Once on the highway Peggy drew a long breath and settled down to the business of thinking. "That's what I get for borrowing things," she muttered, remembering how she had always been taught never to borrow from anyone.

There was only one thing to do. Stop at Carver's jewelry store and see if the ring could be straightened. She had no idea how long it would take. But she would go there immediately. She had heard that since young Jim Carver had come home from college and gone into business with his father they had been considerably richer in the jewelry business. Perhaps that would include being able to straighten a platinum ring.

SLEEPS ON THE JOB

Bombs Don't Hinder School Examinations

Boys and girls of Southern England have refused to allow flying bombs to interfere with their general and higher school certificate examinations, now being held.

Head teachers are full of praise for the calm way in which the children have gone about their work. One group of girls began their geography paper at 9.30 a.m. and finished it at 2.45 p.m., having spent only 50 minutes on the paper, and the rest of the time in shelters.

Edward VII 'Rides' Again In Paris

The bronze equestrian statue of King Edward VII is back in its place in the courtyard of the Societe Generale, one of France's great banks. More than two years ago bank officials whisked it away to a hiding place when Germans ordered it melted down to make bullets.
