CHAPTER VII

Mark, standing with his hand on the back of his chair, wanted to strike him for it. He knew that he had never before in his life been a hearer of murder than at that moment. Something hardened in him; he had been on the point of confession, of making a clean breast of it to Pam, but Fosdick was like a challenge. He stared back at him with fury in his look. There was a breathless kind of silence and Fosdick's slow contemptuous smile, his eyes turned questioning from one to the other.

"I'm an old friend of Horace Byram of Utica," Mr. Fosdick's dry voice had a hint of mockery in it. "I don't seem to remember you, sir, as a Byram."

Mark's white face defied him. "You know I'm not a Byram, Mr. Fosdick," he said in a low voice, hardly controlled; it shook a little with the passion that was choking him.

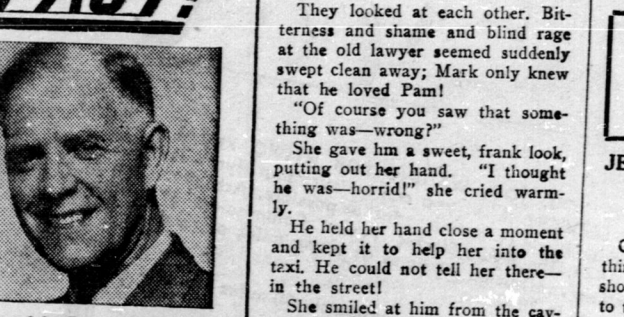

Old Fosdick chuckled; the sound was as unimpassioned as the startled screech of a frightened hen. But he ventured no farther; he saw the look in Mark's eyes; he turned his thin old shoulders toward him and smiled crinkling at Pam.

"How's your aunt, my dear?" he asked dryly, successively, his attitude—excluding Mark from the conversation—seemed to say: "You're in bad company, my child; go home!"

"Pam was flushed; her lip trembled a little but she forced a smile. "I'm going to meet her now. I was on my way when—" she did not speak the name. "Byram," again, it seemed unlikely—"I've got to go now!" She turned to Mark. "Couldn't someone call me a taxi?" she asked hurriedly. "I'm conscience-stricken when I think of Aunt Lynn waiting!"

"I'll get a taxi for you myself," Mark said promptly; he was mind-

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

JESUS' CONFESSION FOR ALL

February 4
 Matthew 9:1, 9-13, 15-26

Golden Text.—Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets.—Matthew 7:12

The most concise account of our Lord's life consists of one sentence only; "He went about doing good and healing." Previous to our lesson we find the people prayed that Jesus would depart out of their midst. Jesus does not remain where he is not wanted; he entered into a ship and came to his own city.

Jesus passed Matthew, who was busy in the employ of the Roman government collecting taxes. Only two words were spoken: "Follow me" and without hesitation Matthew left all to follow Jesus. Let us not be too busy with earthly pursuits to hear the call. "Take up thy cross and follow me!" Like tells us Matthew "made him a great feast in his house." Matthew celebrated this memorable occasion by inviting all his friends to come and get acquainted with the Lord Jesus. Is it not a challenge to us to tell friends of the Saviour?

The Pharisees who were constantly watching Jesus asked his disciples why their Master should eat with sinners. For anyone to

How Can I? "SALADA" TEA

By ANNE ASHLEY

Outstandingly Good "SALADA" TEA

Q. How can I soften hard water?
 A. Hard water can be softened with washing soda. Borax is also good.

Q. How can I loosen stubborn windows?
 A. When the weather stripping causes a window to stick, making it difficult to open or close, dip a cloth in hot paraffin and rub it along the stripping. It works like magic.

Q. How can I make a remedy for sore throat?
 A. Gargle with a warm solution of salt water. Or dissolve one teaspoonful of flour of sulphur in hot milk and sip slowly.

Q. How can I clean tinware?
 A. Kerosene is an excellent cleanser for tinware. It leaves a brilliant polish.

Q. How can I remove scorched spots from clothing?
 A. Onion juice will often remove scorched spots from garments. It applied immediately.

Q. How can I get chickens, or other fowl, perfectly clean when dressing them?
 A. Rub them thoroughly with baking soda and then wash off with lukewarm water.

The Hawaiian Islands were built up by volcanic action from a point about 16,000 feet below the level of the sea.

Last Saturday was such a lovely day—a day that was good to be out in—so I announced my intention of walking to town. Partner laughed "You won't walk very far," he said. "Why not?" I inquired.

"Well, have you forgotten there's a political convention in town today? There will be cars by the dozen on the road!" I didn't know my Samaritan driver at all—and I didn't inquire whether he was Liberal or Tory—it was enough for me that he was a gentleman and with a young boy along to satisfy the proprieties.

We got to town, and my goodness, you wouldn't think there were any bad roads in the country, that is, judging by the number of cars on the street. They were parked from one end of town to the other. But I had little time to waste so I hurried along, did my shopping, had a cup of tea with a friend and was then ready for home.

Just as I got back to Main Street, party satellites were coming away from the Town Hall. I went into one of the stores to pick up a few parcels and what a kick I got out of watching the passers-by from my hide-out!

The Bookshelf...

The Master Of The Mill

Frederick Philip Grove

The brilliant Canadian author of Our Daily Bread has built an extremely skillful novel around the widely differing careers and characters of three generations of mill-owners whose fortunes grew swiftly with the growth of Canada.

There is the mean and ruthless founder of the mill around whose grain elevators the town becomes a teeming city; his son who becomes a senator and whose engineering genius the old man uses without a word of thanks; and his grandson, Sir Edmund, third master of the mill, reared in luxury, who wields the immense power of the mill with his grandfather's realistic unscrupulousness. Mr. Grove uses with telling ease the recollections of the aging senator, of Sir Edmund's wife, and of an outsider to give a full, rounded picture built up in much the same way as a story that he wrote by word of mouth about an intriguing situation, many sided, which the people who lived or watched it never tire of discussing.
