The Canadian Pacific Railway Is a Monument to Free Enterprise in Canada

A notable anniversary has just been observed in the Canadian West, the driving of the last spike into the Canadian Pacific Railway, says the Montreal Star. That event, which took place in 1885, not only signalized the completion of the first trancontinental railway line, linking Canada's Atlantic and Pacific coasts, but also the triumph of one of the greatest aof which the history of the British Looking Backward It is opportune that we should recall this fact at the present time, particularly because free enterprise is virtually on trial in all the free nations. Looking backward, no student of Canadian history can fail to realize what free enterprise has meant in the building and development of this Dominion. Without it we should be a backward people today, both at home and in the eyes of the worla abroad. Free enterprise has not tation unexcelled in the world. and it has made Canada one of the world's greatest trading nations whose products are sold in nearly every foreign market, and whose credit stands firmly upon her trading status.

Engineering Triumph Our vast steel works, our mining industries, our shipping, our huge export trade in meat, in cereals, in lumber-all have been developperity by the effort of free enter-When the C.P.R. project was first mooted its sponsors went, with which to defray the cost of the gigantic undertaking, but London turned thumbs down on their appeal, so they came back to Canada, and it was Canadian capital and faith in the undertaking, Canadian courage and Canadian skill that triumphed over what seemed insuperable obstacles, and made the C.P.R. not only a possibility but an engineering triumph that still stands as a monument to free enterprise in Canada. This country is still a young and growing Dominion. The field for development is a vast one, but it is a field which will never be developed as it can be developed
