ROAD TO V-DAY___

FOR THE SECOND TIME in little more than a quarter of a century Germany has failed in an attempt to become a dominant world power through force of arms.

In 1918 the armistice signed at Compiegne marked the end of the Hohenzollerns and Imperial Germany. Today Adolf Hitler and the exponents of a creed that, for a time, veiled the resurgence of German war lust under the guise of National Socialism, stand shorn of their power before the bar of world justice.

During the bitterest warfare the world had ever known the British Empire stood steadfast to the principles underlying the democratic way of life. The Empire, standing alone in the dark days after the fall of France, finally drew powerful allies in Russia and the United States. This war-born alliance must be knit even more closely in the days of peace if the reconstruction and stabilization of Europe is to be accomplished successfully.

Canada's part in the war has put the Dominion in the forefront of the world's nations. At sea, on land and in the air, men from the farms, the mines and the factories have carried into action the courage and resourcefulness inherent in the country's growth. On the home front Canada's war effort has been second to none in proportion to her manpower and re-

Canadians will never forget that up to the close of hostilities in Europe the Dominion's fighting forces totalled upwards of 800,000 men and women - the pre-war strength of the armed forces was 10,200. Scarcely a family has been untouched by the absence of members on active service and thousands of families have known the sorrow of casualties.

In Britain's darkest hour the Dominion's soldiers stood virtually alone on England's eastern and southern beaches, Canadian airmen fought valiantly in the Battle of Britain to repel the Nazi threat in the skies and the small, but ever-growing Canadian Navy had a proud role in helping the Royal Navy protect the Atlantic Those were the early days of the war. Since then Canada's armed forces have added a golden lustre to the pages of the Dominion's

v v v v LESSON FROM ABROAD

THE CANADIANS are going to come home from Europe - or have come in thousands of cases - with a new interpretation, a new appreciation of that once vague phrase "standard of living".

They sailed five, three, two years ago towards a continent they had been taught to think of as the world leader in many respects. They will come back with the thought that Europe's material goodness is for the few. The lot of the many is what has taught the new appreciation of the phrase "standard of living".

They will realize as never before what the term means in the Canadian way of life when workers can afford cars and keep them running, when low and high can attend the same schools, when radios and washing machines and other labor-saving devices are commonplaces in the homes of the Dominion.

They will come back knowing that even
Britain, the Mother Country, is backward in many ways when compared with the stage to which North American civilization has advanced. But they will come back, too, with a new ppreciation of the tattered but still existent

European culture. Privates and majors have European culture. Frivates and majors have listened to symphony orchestras in London's Royal Hall, to opera in Romes' Royal Opera House, to concerts in Paris and Brussels. They have visited world-famous art galleries and seen architectural masterpieces in Old World cities.

In their war-born interest may rest the seeds of encouragement and initiative that will bring Canadian strides in many fields.

And at the root of all their thinking will be will, can be done, where a high standard of living can be raised higher still, where an existent culture can be borne to ever greater heights.

It proved to be a revelation in many ways. The Hagersville Club is the first undertaking in that town to establish an organization whose objective is service work. They are off to a good start with forty members, and all seemingly enthusiastic.

There was no noticeable ribaldry or hilarity in Jarvis on V-Day. The folks here proved sensible to the true significance of the situation, as has been their consistent attitude throughout the terrible war years.

VVVV SHOULD MOTHERS GO OUT TO WORK ?- new day ahead.

- By Lewis Milligan

THE OLD QUESTION of women's rights or the equality of the sexes has been rehad to take the place in industry of men who have been called to the armed forces, and thousands of young women have enlisted in the various military services. The normal peacetime course of domestic, social and business life has been disorganized and has had to be reorganized to cope with the abnormal and urgent demands of war.

Canada, of course, has not suffered in this respect to anything like the same extent as Great Britain, where domestic and social life has not only been disrupted by the demands of war, but where homes and entire communities have been wiped out. We in Canada know nothing of this from experience, and we realize it so little, even in imagination, that we peevishly complain about the housing shortage and certain restrictions on what are mere luxuries, when we should be humbly thankful for the great mercies which we enjoy.

But the time is coming - and we are praying that it may be soon - when we shall have return to peace-time conditions; when the men of our armed forces will return to resume their places in the home, the community and in business and industrial affairs. When that time comes the women, who have taken the places of the men and turned to manual labor in order to produce the materials of war, will have to resume their normal places in the home and the community.

There are those, however, who are contending for a continuance of present abnormal domestic and industrial conditions into peace-They argue that women should have equal rights with men in the labor market, and that if married women want to work to the neglect of their family duties they should be encouraged in doing so on an all-round equality with married men.

An example of this kind of argument was presented in a recent radio broadcast by M. J. Coldwell, national leader of the C.C.F., when he said: "Many thousands of women who have helped to build our war effort, will not all wish to retire from work outside the home. those women who want work, outside the home, there must be work to do. There must be work to do, and at wages equal to those of men". It will be noted that Mr. Coldwell emphasizes that "there must be work to do". That means that work must be found for women who want to work outside of the home. The C.C.F. promises full employment for everybody who wants to work, and its proposed socialized industries presumably would have to find jobs for married women who did not want to stay at home, and also pay them the same rate of wages as their husbands

What kind of society would we develop here in Canada under such conditions, with the father and mother going out to daily work? Mr. Coldwell was strongly in favor of the Children's Allowances Bill, the purpose of which was to encourage people to go in for lar-ger families; but that purpose would be defeated by enticing married women away from the home with the offer of work at equal rates of pay with the men. Such a movement of women away from the home to the factory would result in a serious decline in the birth rate, an increase in juvenile delinquency and would eventually lower the moral standards of family and social life. We have had examples of this under the pressure of war conditions.

It is not a question of women's rights or the equality of the sexes; it is a question of the rights of children and the equality of one family with another. Children need the constant care of the mother in the home if they are to be given a proper start in life. On the other hand, the married women who went out to work for equal pay with her husband would have a double financial advantage over the wom an who stayed at home and attended to the task of raising a family on the income from one pay-envelope.

IF YOU FIND IT HARD to say anything good about your home community, or your country, and if you think that other communities or other countries offer the means of greater happiness and prosperity for you, why in heaven's name do you not go there, and let the knowledge that they are returning to a country where almost anything that the people country where country where almost anything that the people country where country where almost anything that the people country where almost anything that the people country where country w

Unfortunately, I can't tell you much of my activities over here due to the rigid censorship. The people treat us very good and we are well fed. As yet I have not had the good fortune to run into any of the Jarvis boys. I did come close to seeing one though. While stationed at a certain camp in England I happened to run into the canteen in the town for a cup of tea. As all the tables were occupied, I sat down with a Canadian Air Force chap and naturally we began to talk. During the conversation he happened to mention a chap by the name of Harry Gowan At the mention of such a familiar name, I was interested at once and after asking a few questions, as to the mans rank and so forth, I was quite convinced that it was Harry Gowan from Jarvis. The airport in question was only three miles from where I was stationed and so I decided that at the first opportunity I would go over and see Harry. How ever, faie stepped in and two days later I was moved away from that part of England and within a short while, was on my way to Belgium. Of course I was disappointed that I could not see Harry, but guess this is what is known as the irony of war.
