THE Chantecler

The Great German Port of Hamburg

The Canadians are calling on Hamburg, the great seaport of Germany, writes W. L. Clark, in The Windsor Star. It is a sprawling city, which has its streets running along the edges of inlets from the sea. The main harbor is a huge expanse of docks and warehouses. The city is an intricate pattern of rivers and water routes.

Hamburg is a city where a motorist can get lost in no time. Short streets that run smack into a river or canal make driving confusing. We recall once getting so lost in the maze of Hamburg streets, we finally had to get a native with a bicycle to ride in front of us to our destination. And, even then, we were not sure we had not been driven through narrow passages that present no difficulty for the cyclist.

Hamburg has been one of the important water terminals in Europe. Ocean traffic from the world ports arrives at Hamburg, while river and canal traffic connects with the intricate systems of inland waterways that extend through Germany.

To capture Hamburg means that the Canadians have taken one of the greatest prizes of the war against the Reich.

Princess of Gratz Tea

CHAPTER III

Two princesses understand and a little French, Madame Louise said. "Likewise," said Louise, "I shall be a painter, a poet, a tramp—anything I like; and I don't care if I earn an honest penny. I'm tired of your dictator ways. I won't be regimented any longer. Roger can take it, scoundrel, and he's welcome to it. I'm off."

And away he was, too, that very night, even though she had risen to magnificent heights of inventive, threatening and pleading. He should never have a cent of her money—he didn't want it. His brother Roger should have it all, he was welcome to it. He was the most ungrateful of nephews—he wasn't, but she was the most arrogant and overbearing of aunts.

Madame had flung Michel's picture in a trunk that night and tried to put him forever out of her heart. She had heard no word of him in the years between, nor had his brother Roger, who was now with the air force; nor had anyone else. If he had gone to France as he had planned, perhaps they would never have met. Bonhomme Frick's house was a place of mystery, of wild, untamed, reckless and devoid of any fear of self-consciousness. The old lady had set his picture in his chrome frame in her dresser and had taken it up to look at it, holding it close to her, when she heard Roger's step on the stairs.

She put down the picture hastily, but Roger's dark eyes found it at once. "Forgive him, Tante Mimie," he said. "None of your business." She gave him her cheek to kiss. "And why are you sneaking up the back stairs?"

"You told me to, over the phone—don't you remember? I'm the housekeeper's nephew now. What is all this anyway?"

"It's Rudolph. He's the Baron Rudi de Morpin. The princess is his niece. He's been telling everyone in this little country of his that he's a million. I don't have the heart to tell these poor, little, downy creatures that he's only the butler. Roger, it would have been cruel to do so. Had you seen them when they first walked into Philibert's this evening?"

Roger held up his hand. "He's you all over, that's why the two of you were always fighting. But underneath it all, Madame Fabre-Laisant, Mike was the apple of your eye and you know it. The harder you yelled at him, the louder you swore at him, the more you loved him."

The old lady scowled fiercely, then blew her nose and grabbed the hastily for a cigarette. "You're too smart, you, Roger—always were—too darned smart."

Roger grinned, shook his head. "I'll never be able to outsmart you, Duchess. Now who's about the royal guests? Is the housekeeper's nephew permitted to have a peek at them?"

"They are at dinner now. I take it you dined before you came here?"

CHRONICLES of GINGER FARM

By Gwendoline P. Clarke

Life is a queer business. Sometimes it is difficult to write because there is so little to write about; other times it is difficult because there is so much. This is definitely one of those "so much" occasions. Even yet it doesn't seem over. Partner said this afternoon—"I suppose it won't be long now before the boy is home again."

That, too, is hard to believe. We said good-bye to our son, dear, mindfully resigning ourselves to parting that might stretch out into years. And now it may be a little less than a year before we see him again. And in that we realize how extremely fortunate we have been. Naturally we hope our good fortune may continue—but we are not out to count our chickens yet.

Every day brings fresh news from Europe. Goering captured... Quisling on trial... and surely the most forgiving souls must be glad that these inhuman monsters will soon meet the fate they so richly deserve. As for Hitler—very few people believe even yet that he is dead. I hope he isn't. I hope he is hiding some where, cringing in the fear of the fate that awaits him. And oh, how I hope they catch Himmler!

Yes, the end of the war in Europe and its far reaching results have occupied our attention so much that it has almost stopped us talking about the weather. Any other time we would be saying plenty. Such a spring! There are many farmers in Halton county who haven't finished seeding yet.

In fact there are a few who never even started. Some, of course, managed to get through—that is on the lighter side—while a few had to sow over again.

And such weather for chickens! Last Thursday we had another 200 arrive by train. And on that day it snowed again. It wasn't cold enough for snow to settle but what a wet sticky path there was from the house to the chicken pens. Partner finally put boards down—ard now I find walking the boards quite a feat in the act of keeping my balance. If the boards were over a creek I would have been drowned long ago. Of course the little chickens inside their warm dry pen, found little to worry about, but the pullets, now seven weeks old, and without any artificial heat, looked as if they regretted being hatched out to face such a damp, dismal world.

However there are other feathered friends that we find a little more cheery. To my great joy a pair of bluebirds are nesting near the house. We haven't seen blue birds around here for years. And how I love them! Perhaps it is only because of Mother's story—but I always feel that bluebirds are a good omen—that where there are bluebirds there is happiness. That flash of heavenly blue among the trees often seems to me like a message of courage and hope straight from God.

I wish I liked chickens as well as I like bluebirds. Of course I just love them when they are small—the chickens I mean—but after they are about six weeks old there are times when I wish I had never seen a chicken. Will they roost where you want them to? Not a bit of it. They will fill up the roosts in the daytime all right, especially when they take their afternoon nap—but they stubbornly avoid anything that looks like a roost at night and bunch up together all over the floor. And if there is one place where they shouldn't be that is where you find them. Children and chickens are very much alike in one way—the younger they are the less trouble they give. How well I remember my mother saying—"I wish your children were all in your cradles again—you were not half the worry to me when you were small that you are now!"

I imagine that feeling will find an echo in a good many other mother hearts. It has done in mine upon occasion. But chickens and children come through that stage—and for that we can all be truly thankful.
