Practical Gardening

Seed Boxes for Early Start

A seed box should be a part of every well planned garden. Not only will it be utilized to give plants a head start by sowing seeds before the outdoor soil is workable, but it may be used to advantage throughout the gardening season.

The size and type of seed box will depend upon the soil in which it will be used. The box is raised over a pan containing water. Before the soil will start to carry water to the seed bed, it will be necessary to first saturate the soil with the proper moisture. Provided water is always kept in the pan, seed boxes should be filled with a highly porous soil or one of the newer soil substitutes such as top peat sand, peat moss mixed in equal parts with good black top soil. Vermiculite or sphagnum moss also prove excellent soil substitutes.

SPOTS OF SPORTS

By FRANK MANN HARRIS ('CA Six Critic')

All this news about ball-players popping down Mexico-way, lured was somebody has probably already put it—by the chorus of tenor Dolores rather than those of tenor Dolores, puts us in mind of the old one about the baseball player who had a well-earned reputation of being a very slygash man with a back. He could prove a winning team, and do so on about half that it cost his rivals.

Horse-racing has long been bally-as "The King of Sports" and we've most likely wasted more of our personal time, and had more fun, attending the races than anything you could mention. And there're countless thousands more who would say the same. Yet, if we'd all break down and be strictly honest about it, just how much appeal has horse-racing to us, just as a sport and nothing else? Much as we hate to admit it, the answer is surprisingly little.

Perhaps the question most often asked of a sports writer—except, of course, "Can you get me a couple of passes?"—is "What's the rest of all sports?" And it's slightly hard to answer because, in its own particular place, season and hour, any one of several seems to touch them all and just a few weeks later, can have about as much thrill as the average Parliamentary oration.

Take hockey, for instance. From November to March, nothing on earth appears to come close to it in excitement, and the thought having to miss a single tangle between your own favorite team and its opponent, rival can loom as a painful calamity. Yet, if in-

Shortage of Farm Implements Serious

Surprisingly little safety has been given in most newspapers to the farm implement shortage due to strikes, presumably because most editors believe their readers prefer news of rationing, rationing and rationing rather than of plows, says "The Star." But the situation appears extremely serious. Unless a farmers' difficulties are relieved, and soon, one of the largest industries in farm production will suffer. The effects will be far-reaching. Canning, cereal packaging, all food processing, dairyming and all live stock raising will seriously feel the pinch.
