THE EASY LIVING

THERE MUST BE an amazing number of people in our society who seek what they must regard, an easy living. To this end three men escaped with $8,000 from a bank in the County last Friday morning. In the process of the crime the Bank Staff, as well as Officers of the Law who endeavored to apprehend them, had their lives placed in temporary jeopardy. The bandits were carrying guns, presumably loaded, and under such circumstances the possibility of a human life being taken is not remote.

When men of this character enter a peaceful community with such intent the quite natural reaction of the citizenry is that no punishment could be sufficiently severe to fit the crime. Yet, strange as it may seem, public opinion was with the murderers of Meyer Tobias in Toronto when the murder charge against the four youths was reduced to manslaughter. The problem of what to do about these parasites who roam the countryside in search of an easier way of life remains as great as ever. The recommendation has just been made to the Saskatchewan Government to end corporal punishment. Propaganda for a better way of life for those who fail to pay obedience to the laws of the land increases daily. Yet has it ever been proved that the example of anyone hanging for committing murder has in any way contributed to greater lawlessness?

We hold to the belief that the fear of God engendered in the minds of children by stern discipline is the greatest deterrent to crime yet devised. Those who get away with pseudo murder in their youth can easily run up against the real thing in later life. Any man who will rob a bank, in a country like Canada, can never be anything better than a menace to decent society so long as he lives—the uplifter notwithstanding.

A business founded with a war veteran's gratuities plus a small loan, or a small company in which several young men pool their resources and their enthusiasm, has an initial advantage in that its proprietor is usually well-known in his home town and enjoys from the outset valuable goodwill which it would take years to accumulate in a big city.

Every thriving business is an asset to a small town, just as every successful small town businessman usually is a staunch supporter of all community projects and a leader in civic life. Many small towns offer opportunities for both successful and unsuccessful businessmen. They need more young men to take up radio repair shops, laundries, bakeries and small industries. They need more young businessmen who will help build community links, support the churches and serve on town councils and school boards.

To the young man considering investment of gratuities or warplant earnings and to the older man looking for a way to set up a son or son-in-law in business, small towns offer many of the best opportunities in Canada today, together with a way of life that combines city comforts with more leisure and satisfaction than the urban dweller ever can hope to achieve.

SMALL TOWNS ARE GOOD BETS

A CANADIAN PROSPECTOR who had "struck it rich" in the mining country of Northern Quebec went back to his home town of Campbellford, Ont., a year ago with his fortune and decided to settle down. Ernest J. Ayrbart was forty-five, filled with vigor and vision, and to him settling down meant no retreat to armchair and slippers but rather a campaign to bring prosperity to his community.

Within a few months he owned a tourist camp, a hardware store, timber interests, a lumber mill and a construction company. He put $350,000 into capital investments and new life into Campbellford. The town hummed with activity, employees shared profits of the new projects and Ayrbart realized interest on his investments. Real estate values went up forty per cent. Elected mayor, the man who gave Campbellford a new lease on life recently predicted that within the next five years its population would jump from the present 3,000 to 10,000.

Not everyone has a third of a million dollars to invest, but Ernest Ayrbart's experience is an indication that money wisely spent in Canada's small towns will yield dividends in monetary profits and satisfaction in helping communities to prosper. It costs less to start a business in a small community than in a big city and the odds favor its success.

Pen, Scissors and Pastepot

We don't pretend to know too much about Radio operations, but on two or three occasions we were not particularly impressed with the good looks of the station personnel. We wonder what will happen to the present station staff when television comes in. The BBC recently appointed a television announcer from among nearly 600 people of both sexes who had applied for the job. They all had to undergo physical tests and apparently the external qualifications decided the choice. Now in the newspaper business you can look like anything and get away with it. In fact some of the best newspapermen are said to look like something of the cat drag in five mornings out of six.

Andrew Higgins is an enterprising gent. He put New Orleans on the map with his shipbuilding enterprise during the war but he is so fed up with union relations he is not going to keep New Orleans on the map in the Post War years. The enterprise he heads has forty million dollars worth of orders for post war goods but he can't get them made without a lot of haggling—so much in fact that he with the support of his shareholders, have come to strike against the strikers. Come to think of it management should have as much right to strike as labour.

We have no sympathy, the way or another for the strikers in the Canadian Seaman's Union, but that's because we are not familiar with the facts. But it does seem strange that the strike was called the day preceding the date a conference had been all arranged with the Department of Labour to peacefully settle the issue.

We haven't been able to buy a pair of odd pants for the last three or four years and the mirror like seats on the existing stock could well serve as rear view mirrors. We don't mind not being able to buy pants if somebody else is getting the available cloth to keep warm. But one thing we can't understand is why the government that controls everything continues to permit the manufacture of those satanic two-toned sports jackets that rub to the knees and which no respectable gent would wear to pitch on manure behind the line.

ENCOURAGE AMATEURS
In our present day culture, as in the days gone by, the drama festival holds an important position and we, who merely enjoy the efforts of the amateurs, should do all we can to encourage them.

THEY'RE PRECIOUS

Too many parents allow their children to play on the roads. One accident, however slight, can cause a lot of grief—to the child, the parents and the operator of a car who was unfortunate enough to have the accident. Children are worth a lot of attention.
