

The Quality Tea "SALUDA" TEA

TREASURE OF THE SEA

By George E. Walsh

SYNOPSIS

CHAPTER IV: Tucu agrees to a deal, accepting one-quarter interest in the steamer. The lugger heads for the wrecked steamer, but the way they sight a schooner, obviously afloat. The lugger breaks and it is wallowing heavily. Tucu sets out to board the schooner, but when halfway to it, an old man appears on the deck. He is obviously crazy.

CHAPTER V
"Crazy!" muttered Captain Tucu. "Left alone, an' gone crazy. Pull away!" he added, addressing the Carbs at the helm.

The boat started in the direction of the schooner, but it hadn't covered a quarter of the distance when another figure appeared on the deck. If the sight of the old man had surprised the boarding crew, the second apparition—for it seemed like an apparition to many, certainly to Dick Jordan on the deck of the lugger—created amazement and consternation.

The newcomer was a woman, lightly clad, and with her hair streaming down her shoulders and back, half way to her waist. She had the appearance of one who had been interrupted in the midst of her toilet, rushing on deck to ascertain the meaning of the commotion. She glanced in the direction of the lugger, shading her eyes with one hand, and then back at the old man on the deck. She spoke to him in a low voice, which he heeded, for he withdrew from sight, and permitted her to do the talking.

"What boat is that?" she asked in a clear, bell-like voice.

Tucu hesitated a moment before replying; then in his most persuasive voice, he informed her: "The San Miguel, of Luman."

"The girl, or young woman—it was difficult to estimate her age at the distance, but to Dick she seemed young and comely—seemed in doubt, hesitating before replying, but her eyes were busy studying the boat's crew and the lines of the lugger. Finally, as if she had made up her mind, she returned in a sharp, peremptory way:

"Well, what do you want? You can't come aboard!"

Captain Tucu smiled a bit craftily. "We took her for a derelict—abandoned."

"You can see now she isn't," replied the girl quickly. Then, as if anxious to pacify them, she added in a pleasant voice: "Thank you for coming; but we don't need any help. We can manage."

Tucu was a little nonplussed, but the girl hadn't left his ugly face. "You can't get into port with that wreck. We'll help y'er rig her up."

"No, thank you, was the cool retort. "We can manage."

The small boat had been drifting nearer all the time, and as if alarmed by this the girl added sharper than before: "Keep away, please! You'll get tangled in the wreckage."

Tucu turned to his mate and exchanged a few words with him, and then addressed the girl again: "Who's that old man aboard?"

She drew herself up and frowned. "You mean my father, Captain Bedford?"

"Is he cap'n?" There was a smile of derision on his face, which the girl caught. Resenting it, she nodded curtly, and said: "Yes! Now if you have no further business here, go back to your own ship."

"I'd like to speak to the cap'n," was the cool retort, motioning to the Carbs to dip their oars again.

"You can't!" was the frightened reply. "He's not well, and has gone below."

Dick caught the note of alarm in the voice. He gave a start and glanced around him. The handful of Carbs left on the lugger were grouped forward, intently interested in the schooner and the conversation going on between the skipper and the girl. No one paid the least attention to him.

"If Tucu goes aboard," he muttered under his breath, "I'll go too!"

He walked toward the stern and measured the distance from the lugger to the schooner. It was great. Once under the protection of the overhanging stern he could swim almost unobserved to the mass of wreckage drifting on the port side of the derelict.

But once more his attention was drawn to the others. A shrill, babbling voice came from the forward shrouds of the schooner. Captain Bedford was standing in them, waving and beckoning to the Carbs. Instead of going below, he had crept forward where, out of reach of his daughter, he was inviting Tucu and his men to come aboard.

"Come aboard, mate! You're welcome! Throw me a line and I'll catch it! Hal! Ye missed it that time. Heave again!"

The girl in the stern gave out horrified glances and then hurried to her parent's side. Captain Bedford meekly dropped down to the deck at her coming and mumbled thickly a mild protest. Dick saw the girl lead him away, and then return to the rail.

By that time Tucu and his crew had made fast to the schooner and were preparing to climb aboard. "Stop!" she cried. "I forbid you coming aboard!"

Captain Tucu looked up and leered at her. "It's at the cap'n's invitation we're comin'," he said. "It ain't against the law, lady, to accept the skipper's invite, is it?"

"My father's not responsible for what he says," she cut in sharply. "I'm in command here, and I forbid!"

Dick didn't hear the finish of the sentence. He had quietly dropped over the stern of the lugger, and was once more battling with his old enemy—the sea.

Swimming slowly, with his head low down in the water, and making a wide detour around the stern of the derelict, Dick reached it without attracting attention. Nobody on the lugger had noticed his departure, and those aboard the schooner were too interested in their prize to give heed to anything else.

Dick climbed up the rigging hanging over the side opposite the lugger, and secured a firm grip on the deck rail with both hands. Tucu and his men were still forward, arguing with the girl. Dick could hear her high-pitched voice raised in remonstrance.

"If you put a foot on this deck, I'll shoot!" she was saying. "The law allows it. You're boarding my ship against my will!"

Dick thrust his head above the deck yet, but was hanging over the side, with heads in view. The girl was facing them, with a defiant glitter in her eyes, and an ugly-looking automatic in one hand.

Her eyes were deep blue, but just eyes they were dark with passion. The face, tanned by long exposure, was set in hard, determined lines. Perhaps in repose it was beautiful, but there was a fierce strength and passion in it that rather suggested the tiger at bay. There was not an ounce of fear or cowardice reflected in the eyes and face.

"Father asked us aboard, lady," Tucu replied after a pause, an insinuating pleasantry in his voice. "Can we come because of that. Where's he gone?"

"I told you I was in command here," was the short, curt reply. "That's sufficient. Now get aboard!"

Tucu glanced aft and then forward. "Where's the crew?" he asked, smiling.

The girl woman paled slightly through her tan, but answered unhesitatingly. "There's no crew aboard. No one but father and me. Now you know the truth."

CHRONICLES of GINGER FARM

By Gwendoline P. Clarke

Last week Joy and I were absolutely moved to tears. We just couldn't keep our emotions under control at all. You see we were making mustard pickle. Not just a pint, or even a quart, but twenty jars of it. So why wouldn't we weep?

Why is it that onions make one weep—and is there any prevention? The best thing I have struck so far is peeling the onions over the kitchen stove with one lid off. The fire doesn't have to be slight either—the draught will carry the fumes up the chimney. It isn't a hundred percent but it does make the job a little less sorrowful.

Here is another remedy you might like to try. Bob told us that if you kneed on the floor while peeling the onions the fumes will never bother you. So Joy and I tried kneading on the floor—and the kitchen looked like a miniature prayer meeting. But we soon found the idea didn't work—it was just about as crazy as it looked. Bob said we didn't do it right—that while on our knees we should still have kept the onions above the level. Another way I have heard recommended is to stick a piece of raw potato on the end of the peeling knife—but I never found that worked very well either. Something tells me that anyone who could invent, or propagate, an odorless onion might live in clover-sweet-scented clover—for the rest of his natural life.

Against Oppression
The word "stranger" is the name for foreigner. The children of Israel as foreigners in Egypt knew what oppression meant. Out of their sufferings was to come the wisdom which should reveal to all mankind that human relationships are to be governed by love and not by tyrannical cruelty.

It is a Christian's duty to care for widows and orphans. Their prayers will be heard by the Lord if they are neglected. If we are truly Christian in our sympathies we will be tender and thoughtful to such who are poor and burdened.

Employers of labor are instructed not to oppress those who work for them nor to withhold from them their due wages. Against slavery and economic oppression God speaks in no uncertain terms. As for the worker, he is to do his work with all his might, in good conscience, rendering service as to the Lord and not to man. As for the employer, he is to have due regard for the welfare of the worker: as one who must give an account of his trusteeship to God.

"Blessed of the Father" is the inheritance of the kingdom of the good deeds they had done. Jesus gives as a reason for inviting them to an inheritance in His kingdom the fact that they had administered to Him in His need. The whole destiny of man hangs on his faith, but the proof of faith is conduct.

It is deeply significant that the righteous were not conscious of the good deeds they had done. Jesus so identifies Himself with His people that any act done to them he regards as done to Himself.

The real test whether we love our brethren is—do we minister to their need? The one thing that Jesus whether or not we have received Christ is our reception of those who belong to Christ. Christ identifies Himself with the least of His brethren. What we do for Christ's brethren we should do for Christ's sake.

Beware of Flies!

It has been said that the common house fly—Musca domestica—is more dangerous than the tiger, cobra, flea, leech, or the rattlesnake. Flies feed on filth, and spread cholera, dysentery, typhoid fever, and other diseases. They should be exterminated as soon as possible. Beware of them!

After recovering slightly from the shock of the budget in London, the employer called his staff together and explained that there must be further reductions in the staff.

"I mean we shall all have to begin our diets," he ended. Then a woman's pause, he turned to a junior clerk, who did not appear to be listening. "Do you understand what I'm saying, Smith?"
"Yes, sir," replied Smith. "But it's no good telling me that. My back ache at the bridge before."

"Talking about riding," said one, "I saw a chap in a circus who jumped on the horse's back, slipped off, caught hold of its tail, and finished up on its neck."
"So what," retorted the other, "all that, in my first riding lesson?"

Where's the Tip?
Down in the small southern town where he lives, people are so fond of the tip. More than the elderly negro has become a trifle spoiled. The day he presented a check for $100 at the local bank. He took money from the teller, counted it, then recounted it. He didn't seem to be satisfied.

"What's the matter, Uncle Sam," asked the teller. "Isn't it $100?"
"Yes," was the grudging reply, "but it's just barely is."

"All right," agreed Annie. "Only must be the highest admiral and command to you."
Harold objected, and as usual, Annie had a compromise.
"Fine," suggested the shrewd little Miss. "Let's play that I'm the admiral's wife. That will do just well."
