NOCTURNAL MUSINGS ON PARLIAMENTARY HILL

By Lewis Milligan STANDING on Parliament Hill at Ottawa beneath the stars, gazing meditatively upon that majestic building with its lighted windows and dark central Peace Tower, I caught a vision of Government. Within those walls was a Chamber in which men from every part of a vast country were assembled on opposite sides, facing each other and debating questions affecting the lives of twelve million people.

gated some 120,000 persons of almost every vocation, trade and profession. As I looked around on those buildings and tried to grasp the ramifications of the government power which radiated from that centre of national authority, my mind harked back to a colonial beginnings in the emergence of Provinces, with a status to a Confederation of Provinces, with a House of Commons and a Senate as the supreme governing bodies. I wondered how many Canadians realize the greatness of our country, the blessedness of this Westminster, with all that a popularly-elected and firmly established central government has meant in the development of this Dominion. Missing on that architectural symbol of freedom and stability, the lines of Tennyson came to mind:

It is a land that freeman till, That sober-suited Freedom chose, The land, where girt with friends or foes A man may speak the thing he will; A land of settled government, A land of just and old renown, Where Freedom broadens slowly down From precedent to hundred years ago, read like a prophecy of what Canada was to become. The poet might also have been expressing the fears of our own disturbed time, in which Freedom is threatened by class warfare and dictatorship, when he wrote: "Should handless unions persecute Opinion, and induce a time When single thought is civil crime, And individual freedom mute..."

QUOTE FROM YESTERDAY THE GENERALITY of men are naturally apt to be swayed by fear rather than by reverence, and to refrain from civil rather because of its own foulness. —Aristotle

Chemistry? How does it help me? SOME MAY NOT realize it but there is hardly a job that doesn't depend in some degree on chemistry. It often provides the raw material or is a vital element in product treatment. In many cases the finished article is entirely chemical. Chemistry's contributions to the home and individual are countless. Chlorine purifies the water we drink. Textiles are chemically treated to give them wearing qualities. Chemical fertilizers mean bumper crops. Chemistry produces paint, tans leather. As "Cellophane" it protects things we buy; as nylon or plastics, it serves us endlessly. This is a chemical age, with the C-I-L oval as symbol of an organization devoted to serving Canadians through chemistry.
