ish of words. Even Christopher Storm was convinced of Vallaincourt's sincerity. He had met Curt that morning and in a rush of boyish feeling had deeded The Nest, the house he had built for Veronica and himself. That left the others out in the cold. Better now that Veronica should marry Storm than Vallaincourt. if he was going to turn his back on them. Storm, at least, would see that they had their allowances, maybe something more. But Curt, in his complete about-face, could not be relied upon. He might cut them off completely, in disgust with himself and them, too. You can't take chancees with a reformed rake. He is liable to become very self-righteous and unapproachable. You see: Curt Vallaincourt had to die."

Miss Bigelow's eyes remained closed. She was breathing heavily.

"Vallaincourt, of course, had told only Veronica, to whom he had made full confession, and Christopher Storm because he was forced to, and Shari Lynn. Shari Lynn, fatalistic in all things, probably more so about the enigmatic Curt, et out to do a little blackmailing. Knowing that he hadn't come clean to the four who were in the plot, she started plans for extortion. She got in touch wit Karen and threatened to let the cat out of the bag before the wedding bells rang. Although they all knew that something was wrong, that there was a rat somewhere, Karen decided to be on the safe side. She took $500 with her to The White Abbey for Lynn that night. She surprised Vallaincourt with her, and believe me, surprised was the word for Curt. He was utterly nonplussed when Karen walked in. She was observed by my secretary and myself; by her husband who was there on his own "Got a light, buddy?" account, probably to watch for Shari Karen met on the steps. No doubt she was upset over the rumo, that Curt had been seen with the Lynn woman, and in her muddled way, wanted to see for herself

Your Handwriting and You Alex S. Arnott

Pride is an important feature in handwriting 28 it tells us the gen-eral mental outlook of the writer -whether he is boastful and overconfident, whether he has a quiet unassuming pride of self-satisfaction at things well done or whether he is conceited and vain. If you observe all the capital letters in the script you will see in which category the writer belongs, remembering of course that in every script there are other features to take into account that may tend to favour the writer's character.

Handwriting with very low capital letters shows the writer to be very humble, having little pride. Capitals that are just a little higher than the rest of the letters show a modest pride with a shyness for being in the lime light. Capitals that are twice as high as the other letters show the writer to be over-confident. When the capitals are very high and look out of proportion to the other letters you can be sure the writer is possessed of vanity.
