80 Displaced Persons Arrive In Britain To Start New Life

Half a gale was blowing the rain clouds eastward, and the attacking sun of spring darted in and out like a fencer's sword, as 80 women came ashore at Tilbury, on London River, to set foot for the first time on British soil, writes the London correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor.

There was no ceremony of greeting. Only a few officials met them, welcomed them, and guided them to their night's resting place -no fashionable hotel, but a dormitory in a London County Coun-

British Officer's Quest For Birds Leads to Arrest

The New York Times in a Berlin dispatch said that Brig. W. R. N. Hinde, British commandant in Berlin, was arrested recently on a charge of spying on an airfield in the Russian zone, but was eventually released after questioning. It was all a case of mistaken identity and a vigilant sentry, the Times reported. Hinde, an ardent ornithologist, was taking advantage of a sunny spring day to pursue his hobby in the woods near the Russian zone where there is a large number of birds. He changed into civilian clothes, armed himself with a pair of binoculars and began walking through the wooded countryside. A Soviet army sentry challenged him. "I am looking for birds," said e British commandant, "You are ooking at our airfield," retorted

The Times then quoted Hinde as saying: "Utter rot, my dear fellow. I am Brigadier Hinde and I have not the slightest interest in counting your planes. I am looking at birds and you are frightening them away, dash it." The British officer was whisked away to the Soviet Kommandatura -

It was 2 below zero. Ten school children huddled around the little oil stove in the canvas-top sleigh as it jogged briskly along the snow-banked road. Suddenly there was a sickening lurch. The sleigh tilted violently and rolled over on its side. In an instant the stove had exploded and the canvas top was a mass of flames. Driver Jack Kerr's first task was to control the terrified horses. Then he leaped to the rescue of the children, many of whom were the children, many of whom were pinned under the burning sleigh

Working quickly, Kerr pulled Working quickly, Kerr pulled the children out, one by one, rolling them in the snow to smother their burning clothes. Then, although burned himself, he managed to put out the fire, right the vehicle and gallop the children to the village. On arrival, he didn't wait a moment to tend his own injuries, but immediately went for a doctor. Soon all were receiving proper medical treatment.

However, it may be well to know that all this money wasn't "velvet", this for the simple reason that there is another and debit side to the tourist business, with the debit side showing that with the debit side showing that Canadians spent an annual average of about $150,000,000 in the United States. Actually, our tourist trade balance amounts annually to be-tween $50,000,000 and $75,000,000 This doesn't mean that we shouldn't be anxious for tourists-$50,000,000 to the good from them isn't hay. It means only that when we discuss the tourist business we should see the whole picture.
