WATERWORKS-

IF THERE IS a strong element in the Village demanding Waterworks they were vocally lacking at the annual nomination meeting a week ago. The matter did come up for some discussion, but aside from a mere handful who expressed themselves in favour of considering some action sometime in the future, nothing

It would indicate that the general feeling the Council might have taken away from the meeting would be simply this - It would be nice to have waterworks but in view of the burden I will have to personally bear, in order to finance the project, I will not be mad if you do nothing

We heartily disagree with such a view. It is a selfish view and unprogressive in it's foun-dation. The only justification for such a view is that Jarvis would be better to remain as it is

The possibility of expansion without waterworks is indeed remote. And the only hope of altering that situation is for a group of progressive citizens to take the matter in hand and fight for the improvement that is needed. It will naturally follow that until such time as the debenture indebtedness is retired there may be some added burden to the ratepayers during that period. But regardless when the project is undertaken that situation will pertain. What we must have is a feeling on the part of all ratepayers preferably, or at least a majority, to undertake this essential work for the benefit of the future generations and the progress of the Vill-

The expressions given at the ratepayer's eeting might easily lull the Council into a ound sleep so far as waterworks is concerned. 0000 MR. QUIRK SEES IT THROUGH-

MR. QUIRK quailed before the spectre of Christmas shopping. Long before advertisements began to tell him how many days were What a grand thing it is to be showered with the milk of human kindness. On Christmas Eve, he and Mrs. Quirk extracted every morsel of news from the paper.

About twenty-five neighbors gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. McBride on Tuesday evening in the form of a farewell party for them before leaving for their new home in Jarvis. The evening was spent in playing progressive Euchre with Mrs Earl Duncan and Mr. Go. Pettit being the winners. Mr. and Mrs. McBride were presented with a lovely table lamp during the social hour, after which all departed wishing Mr and Mrs. McBride success in their new home.
