

The Quality Tea

"SALADA" ORANGE PEKOE

Valley of Revenge
BY JACKSON-COLE

Synopsis
CHAPTER XXIII. The boy is mourning the murder of his father and the loss of his farm, which was burned down, when the girl tells him about the death of his brother.

CHAPTER XXIV
Bartle trembled with the sudden fear that shook him. "The most awful thing I ever heard of!" he blurted out. He put a comforting arm around the young farmer's shoulder. "I'm mighty sorry, Burr. I reckon I don't need to tell you that. But, boy, I'll pledge my last dollar, my last breath, to bring this murderer to rope! Come on with me. We've got to do something right away! At least we'll be the first move by telling the sheriff all about this."

CHAPTER XXV
Bartle considered a moment, then slowly shook his head. "No, you wouldn't be breaking my promise to Dad, would you?"

"Then I'll stick here," young Aldman said wildly. "I'll work till I drop. I'll pay you every cent you owe me, Mr. Bartle. All you ask for is time and — and a loan for a new drying shed."

"Your Handwriting and You"
As Writer Thinks So He Will Write

The deplorable way in which we reserve for the accuracy of handwriting analysis as a means of indicating personal character, as they do not also, other believe that handwriting can be so revealing. As a point of interest to those in doubt of its scope, they need only compare their own writing with another person's in order to learn how vastly different are the writings. There are no two handwriting samples, a good reason why it takes an exceptionally clever person to forge another person's handwriting successfully.

Kentucky and my friends, and I'd be glad to get away from a place like this valley with my skin whole."

"Maybe you would," Aldman said definitely, flinging over the door. "But I won't! Somebody's going to pay for Dad and Sam!"

As the young tobacco farmer galloped off into the night, Burr Bartle went back to his desk, sat down, took up a pen and chewed the end of it. Then he wrote in a steady hand, completing an already half-written letter.

The farm in question. To protect my own interests. I have bought the place and shall rebuild a drying shed which was destroyed by fire. Six thousand dollars gets you this bit of paradise in the world's most fertile valley. Please write me immediately as to when you can come to see for your self what a bargain this is.

He read the letter over, forgetting Burr Aldman's young man's look, and El Caballero Rojo. This Burr Bartle was the same man who had written the letter to him about the death of his brother.

London dressmakers introduced a "bipinnax" to prevent lipstick damage to freckles being tried on by mannequins or customers.

When We Work With God
1 Corinthians 3:20, 21; 4:1-10

Golden Text—We are laborers together with God. 1 Corinthians 3:23.

One of the wonders of redemption is that man is given a part in the saving of his fellows. Note that the offering of Christ needs to be supplemented; No. He alone is the sinless One. But before Jesus ascended he commissioned his disciples to go into all the world and tell the "Good News" to every creature. The task is not completed. We must still "go and preach." We have the rank of ambassadors. We represent Christ and His Kingdom in this world of sin and woe.

Paul set a very high ideal for the Christian minister. We, then as workers together with Him. His minister is in partnership with God. It is a holy calling. Paul urged an intimate acceptance of and obedience to his message. "Behold, now is the day of salvation." Uncle Tobey in Tristram Shandy threatened to do the larch every day for forty years. His exclaiming every morning, appealed to his heart, but he died without doing it. It is always true that "by the streets of by and by," one arrives at the house of "never."

Paul was careful to bring no blame to the ability to bring a stumbling block. As the representative of Christ's Kingdom he must be exemplary in every phase of his life. He did not exercise sin in his life. He, by the grace of God, put it away.

Paul suffered much for the Kingdom. His sin was not to please men but rather to fulfill His commission and approve himself as God's minister. His reputation or his salary were not his first considerations. He concludes a lengthy description of his ministry with the words, "as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all things."

CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM

By Genevieve P. Clark

So, the Price War is really on — and even Cabinet ministers are getting worried. This week-end is supposed to see a Boyer's Strike in action. That is good news. If enough owners all over the country stay with it the result may be startling. They do it. How will they? The other day I was in a grocery store and a woman came in asking for lettuce. The clerk said they didn't have any head lettuce but there should be some leaf lettuce coming in, only it would be six cents a bunch! "Ach," no matter — save me a bunch — I don't care if it's a dollar!" replied the customer. The woman in question was the wife of a working man — but methinks he was a working man with a profitable sideline — a rare-fire contractor towards initiation.

Yes, the average housewife can do a lot towards bringing prices down, but she can't do it all. There must be co-operation in the family too, especially with the non-essential. No wife and mother want to be accused of keeping a "mean" table so naturally she goes to a lot of extra trouble to contribute something towards it at a minimum cost. But if there is no co-operation — if, for instance, half a bottle of ketchup disappears at a minimum cost. But if there is no co-operation — if, for instance, half a bottle of ketchup disappears at a minimum cost.

Probably you will think that the recent war on high prices is a little off the hard beaten track for you. Well, it is. I can't tell you how many thousands of dollars a year are spent on entertainment and food or another way.

Good Letter-Writer Rates With the Gals
Be the strong silent type if you wish — only don't carry your reserve over into your letter-writing. No. If you want to make a hit with the fair sex, at any rate, take like a man who can express his thoughts fluently on paper. It's easy!

Why begin with, "Well, it's a week since your letter arrived, so I guess it's time to answer it." How dull!

Instead, say, "What an exciting week this has been, Jean! Monday the new job — and your good wishes helped me over that difficult first day. Then on Wednesday, the city tennis finals were held. And believe it or not, Tom Lucas and I won the cup! If I had you could have been there to cheer us on!"

Whether writing to a new flame or to a business acquaintance, it pays to take pains with your letters. Our Reader Service booklet No. 27 can help you. Samples and notes for writing business, social, bread-and-butter, sympathy, thank-you, other types of letters.

Modern Etiquette
By Robert Lee

Q. A woman is indebted to several people who have entertained her, would it be all right to give one large party and invite all of them?

A. It would be better perhaps, if a large number of people, give several smaller affairs, inviting to each party only those persons she thinks congenial.

Q. If a woman is seated in a stretcher or bus, and another woman carrying a baby, or a crippled person is standing, should she offer her seat?

A. Yes, even if several men remain seated.

Q. When a son is born to Mr. and Mrs. Robert Smith, Jr., will Robert Smith, Sr. still living, will the new boy be Robert Smith, 3rd or 4th?

A. The present generation will be Robert Smith, 3rd.

Q. When a dance or ball lasts until dawn, and a breakfast is served for those who remain all night, at what hour is this breakfast usually served, and of what does it consist?

A. The breakfast is usually served at about 4 a.m., consisting of bacon or sausage, scrambled eggs, coffee, and rolls.
