THE SYLVESTER
DIAMOND
By BLANCHE ROBERTS

Honey Monroe, pretty young reformed, was in a bad way. She had been married to a man in a Los Angeles department store who had been arrested for a crime she had never heard of. She was now in a small apartment in New York, and she was looking for a way to get out of there. She had a small amount of money, but she was afraid to spend it. She was afraid of the police, and she was afraid of the man who had arrested her husband. She was afraid of everything.

CHAPTER V.
Honey did not close and lock the door as Dan had instructed her to do. There was too much curiosity in her general make-up for that. She wanted to see and to hear what passed between the men. She had been right about the caller. It was Joe Danburne. She wiped the tears from her eyes so she could see clearly and peeped through the crack of the open door.

Dan said to his caller, forcing a yawn to make it appear that he had been disturbed from a sound sleep: "It is rather late, sir, but is there something I can do for you?"

"I am Joe Danburne," said his visitor as if that explained a great deal. "I have business with Miss Monroe." There was deadness in his voice that Honey recognized instantly and a cold chill swept over her body as she saw how cruel and ruthless he looked as he stood before Dan.

The district attorney showed surprise. "Why come here? Why not go to her?" He spoke curtly. "I have been to her apartment. She isn't there."

"How do you know? It's possible that she's asleep." Dan reminded him that it was customary to sleep at this hour of the morning.

"No. She isn't there." Both men were very angry though trying hard to remain cool and collected.

"What makes you think I know where she is? And what business is it of yours, anyway?" Dan straightened his shoulders and Honey saw his right hand close into a tight fist at his side.

"It's my business, all right," said flatterly, and Honey saw his eyes cover the room quickly and settle on the bedroom door. A flame leaped into his eyes and they burned through the narrow opening of the door.

CHRONICLES
OF GINGER FARM
By Gwendoline P. Clarke

He didn't expect to run out of subject matter for his writing for at least ten years. How true-for there is never a dull moment on a farm. Even a leaky roof can provide an element of surprise and uncertainty. We know, because we have such a roof. When the first rain came after the drought this summer we got almost as much rain inside as out. And there was no way of telling where the leaks would come until it did rain. So then Partner started to fix the roof but as sure as he pitched one place the next rain that came would find another weak spot. Another man might have given up the job as hopeless but Partner stuck to it and in the end won out. So now we can listen to the patter of rain on the roof at night without wondering if we should get up and run all over the house to collect pots and pans to catch the drips, or then lie awake longer listening to the steady rat-tat-tat of raindrops hitting those same pots and pans. Did I say "we" would fix it? It should be "I"—Partner wouldn't hear it if the roof leaked!

The opposite seems true of farming districts in Ontario. There are still more jobs than men to fill them. Tomorrow John starts in on a new job just a few miles from home, one of several he could have had.

As for us, we are getting ready for our final threshing this season—the machine is supposed to come in tomorrow. We shall be very glad because we are absolutely out of cereal grain. But we still have neighbours, and like many a farmer before him, when Partner needs chop then he borrows grain from our neighbour across the road. In just the same way another neighbour borrowed seed wheat from us until he had his own threshed.

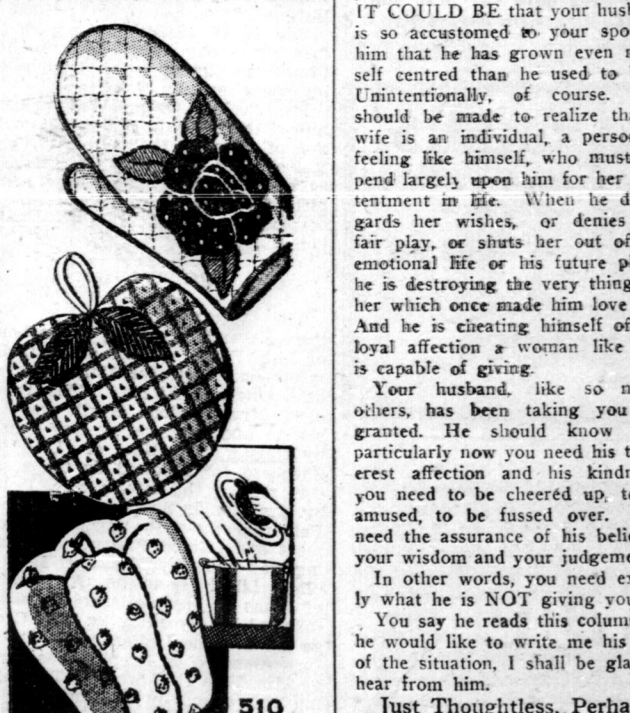

What would we do without neighbours? That question reminds me of a book I read a few years ago concerning a man who decided to go farming. He also made up his mind he would have no "strife" from anyone, and wanted no neighbours, or friends, or relatives to visit him. To this end he bought a farm in an extremely isolated locality. There he brought his loyal and lovable young wife and practically forbade her associating with the few neighbours who did live in the district. Two boys were born to the young couple and their father's hostile, anti-social attitude naturally made life difficult for the boys, and also their mother.

It is a tragic story but well worth reading. The title "Floods of Spring" by Henry Bellman, and first published in 1942.

And while on the subject of books—I wonder how many have read "The Owl Pen" by Kenneth Wells? I have read many reviews of his book, heard the author on the radio and last Tuesday had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Wells at a gathering where he was giving a short address, and yet so far, I have not read his book. But I still have hopes of borrowing it! I cannot possibly buy all the books I want to read but between friends and libraries I get along all right.

Mr. Wells spoke of the wealth of material for writers on a farm and asserted that while he had only four acres of land, a cow, one rooster and a few pullets yet

Parables In The Bible
Matt 13:21-23, 44-46; Luke 13:3-9
Golden Text—Never man so loved this man—John 2:6.

While there are a few parables in the Old Testament, it was Jesus who excelled in the art of teaching truth by this means. Though centuries have greatly changed, the stories are still vivid and the truth is readily apparent.

The parables of the mustard seed and of the leaven illustrate the growth of the kingdom. From insignificant beginning Christianity has become the greatest force in the world.

The parables of the lost coin and the lost son of the prodigal home. These brought great comfort to the Pharisees and to those already found in earnestly seeking the lost. Like wise the true church searches diligently for the lost. The climax seen in the third of the series was the great father heart of God evidenced when he receives the prodigal home. These brought great comfort to the Pharisees and to those already found in earnestly seeking the lost. Like wise the true church searches diligently for the lost. GREATEST OF ALL THE FALL FAIRS

Fair Time Highlights

By the Ful-O-Pep Reporter

Just about what the "World's Series" means to baseball men, the Royal Winter Fair has come to signify, down through the years of its existence, among Canadian farmers and stockmen; and it is possibly difficult for a city-bred person to realize the feeling of justifiable pride which comes to an exhibitor even from having entries in such an outstanding event, let alone winning one of the many prizes.

In a sense the Royal Winter Fair is the culmination of all the smaller Fall Fairs to which we have been devoting this space for several weeks past. Without them—well it might possibly exist, but it could never have reached its present heights of greatness. That is because the smaller Fairs act as a sort of "sieving" process, separating the real champions from the "meat" variety, so that at the "Royal" one is able to see only the best of their kind, whether it be in the animal classes, or in any of the other products of the farm.

But, when all is said and done, it will be the products of the land, and the champion livestock which will be longest remembered—which is just as it should be. Of special interest to grain growers is the striking new trophy illustrated at the top of the page. It will serve for wheat, much the same purpose as the magnificent trophy donated by The Quaker Oats Company last year in the "best oats" division and whoever receives it will be acclaimed as "World Wheat Champion".

Yes, all in all, it's quite an institution, The Royal Winter Fair, and everybody who can possibly make it should by all means attend. So, let's go!

Good Stock — Plus the Best Feeding —
The Real Secret of Championships

A Pair of Real Champions — Holsteins have been outstanding at all the Ontario Fall Fairs and no doubt will be a real center of attraction at The "Royal". Shown above is Baker Rag Apple Cavalier Nig, while below is Shore Rag Apple Nellie — two beautiful specimens of their kind and, of course, both FUL-O-PEP fed.
