Mrs. Nelson Dennis of Selkirk, who was one of four sons of a farmer and remembers the days of his father, he received no pay for his father, he was given one of the whole day.

The school he attended as a boy farm. There were forty students in the school, six miles from his home. He taught all grades from beginners to students in their first year of high school.

That was long before the days of specialization," he explains. "After three years of teaching in the rural schools of Canada, he came to New York and worked for six years in private business schools. In 1907, he entered the city's school system as a teacher of commercial subjects and has been with it ever since.

Before he joined Richmond Hill High School in 1918, he served on the staff of the old Commercial High School which later became Alexander Hamilton High School in Brookly.

In three decades at Richmond Hill High, he made his mark as acting chairman of the accountancy department, as manager of the school bank until all banks throughout the country were closed down by Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1933 and as assistant treasurer of the General Organization.

When questioned as to the change in students through the years, Meachan hesitates for a moment and then replies: "I don't think I ought to say anything on that subject. I took up teaching because I liked working with boys and girls. It would not be fair to say that the students of 50 years ago were brighter and better behaved than those of today or vice versa. I will say that in the old days when schools were smaller and classes less crowded, a teacher had more personal contacts with his pupils. Today, that is impossible."

Meachan lives at 91-30 116th street with his wife, Lucile. His plans for his future are indecisive. A trip to the west coast may be in the cards but he has not yet made up his mind about it. He is not even certain he is going to enjoy a life of leisure.

After a lifetime of constant work, a lot of spare time may be a nuisance," he says. "I'll just have to see how it works out. While I have no large-scale projects in mind I will probably spend more time with photography, a hobby I've developed in recent years."

His philosophy toward leisure will be the same as it was during a half century of teaching. He will meet each situation as it arises.
