CARELESSNESS HEADS THE LIST—

ONE OF THE INTERESTING bits of information of the month comes from the American National Safety Council, which reports that contrary to popular belief, it is not the drunken driver, who is the greatest menance on the highways, but the plain, ordinary careless driver.

Of the many thousands of automobile traffic fatalities in the United States, less than two per cent were caused by drunken drivers, the Safety Council reports. The completely sober driver who failed to exercise proper care was by far more dangerous.

People have been pretty well educated to the fact that a man with a quantity of liquor in his stomach has no place behind the steering wheel. They have not yet realized that no man has any business driving a car unless he keeps his mind on his job every second, abstains from too great speeds, observes the rules of the road scrupulously, and keeps always in the back of his mind the consciousness that the slightest lapse on his part may cause tragedy.

There is no excuse for carelessness on the part of any person at the wheel of an automobile. The highways are no place for the driver who has not a full realization of his responsibilities and who is not prepared to exercise due precaution while on the road to assure his own safety, that of those who may be with him, and of his fellow motorists.

THE TRAVELLING CIRCUS—

— By Lewis Milligan —

THE TRAVELLING CIRCUS is the hardiest of all perennials in the field of entertainment; if flourishes under all climatic conditions and is forever popular with young and old. To the children it is a wonderland in which they wander with open-mouthed amazement, and it is a second-childhood to the parents and grandparents who accompany them. The modern circus reached its climax with Barnum and Bailey in "The Greatest Show on Earth," which tarvelled at one time pretty well all round the earth. In the latter part of the nineteenth century it toured the British Isles, and I recall, as a boy, the thrill of anticipation, the popular excitement and the wonder of realization created by the Greatest Show when it visited Liverpool.

Those were the piping times of peace, before Great World Wars were even thought of. Wars in those days were local conflicts which occurred in distant lands — with the Zulus in Africa, the Dervishes in the Sudan or the wild hill tribes of India. We had read Wild West stories of Buffalo Bill and Deadwood Dick and their clashes with the Red Indians, but they too were remote and we felt that they were, for the most part, fictitious. But here was Buffalo Bill himself — Red Indians and everything — transported across the ocean to prove the truth of his "adventures" and actually show how he triumphed over the Redman, and finally smoked the Pipe of Peace with Chief Blackfoot — surrounded by all the "dead" Indians, who had mysteriously come back to life for the occasion!

That was the big open-air feature of the Show; but there were numerous other attractions, the chief of which was the three-ringed circus in the big tent, with its display of horsemanship and, horsewomanship, performing animals of all kinds, including ravenous and roaring wild beasts, acrobats, jugglers and whimsical clowns — all to the accompaniment of a brass band, which would stop suddenly at a daring stunt on the tight-rope or the flying trapeze. The song about "The daring young man on the flying trapeze" was popular in those days, although I find it was written as far back as 1865, and is attributed to George Leybourne, the celebrated comedian.

The travelling circus of today is little changed from what it was in the nineteenth century, except for a few thrill-producing mechanical devices and electric lighting. None of them, however, are on the same scale as the big Barnum and Bailey Show, and there are quite a number of small circuses which travel over all parts of the continent. There must be some strange fascination about circus life, and I have often wondered how it attracts and holds so many and various types of talented persons and camp followers. For they must have a hard life moving from place to place in all weathers, pitching and striking tents, setting up and taking down mechanical equipment, feeding and tending the elephants and other animals — not to mention themselves — and going through the same round from day to day, month in, month out, and year to year in monotonous regularity. One would think they would get fed-up with such a strenuous and uncomfortable life.

Some years ago, during a stop-over at a remote village in Northern Ontario, I got into conversation with the proprietress of one of these small circuses which was in process of being set up on the outskirts. She was a handsome young woman in her thirties, but strong and businesslike. It was a miserable wet day and she told me that she was having trouble with the mechanical organ. The rain had got into the pipes and valves. She had a bandage on one of her hands, and explained that she had been bitten by a monkey. She was married and had several boys who were running around. Her husband was a disabled veteran of the First World War and she had to do most of the work herself. She told me all this in a casual way, and I asked her how or why she endured that kind of life. She said she was born into it and liked it, although there was little profit in it. During the winter months she worked in Detroit, but with the approach of summer she had the urge to get out on the road again. My sympathy was lost on her. The explanation is that circus people, like poets, are born, not made. Also, like true poets, they are the Peter Pans of life, for they never grow-up or grow out of it, and they keep the Peter Pan alive in all of us.

Trans-Canada Air Lines are making minor modifications on their DC-3 fleet to assist in the handling and stowage of aircargo and air express. The modifications consist of having removable seats installed which, if removed, provide room for more cargo. The cargo is placed behind the bulk-heads and tied down with netting fastened to permanent fasteners in the walls and ceilings. A movable curtain screens off the cargo from the passengers.

Pen, Scissors and Pastepot

Freezer McFrith has informed us that a character down north main street name of Lonklater, is trying to promote another of those spectacular ball games which help to run up the linament sales at Brown's Drug Store. One would almost think that one game would be enough for a normal character. Maybe he hasn't reached the stage where he has to put brace wire on his joints, after strenuous exercise, to keep from being run in on an imbibing charge if he so much as ventures out for two days after a ball game. Just the same the Lions Club old timers can lick anything in sight and that's a challenge.

Speaking of imbibing, we are reminded of the current hearings of the Ontario Liquor License Board. Maybe our interest is heightened by the fact the Board Chairman, Judge W. T. Robb, was a former resident of Dunnville. We have always regarded Judge Robb as a pretty fine individual. But even if we disliked him intently we would be sorry for him under the present circumstances. Faced with an avalanche of applications for licences on the one hand and an even greater number of ardent (so called) temperance workers opposing them the Judge's mind must be in a sweet old merry-go-round. Charged with the task of administering an experimental policy designed to improve the problems of alcohol Judge Robb's task is weighted with responsibility which few would envy. We would be worried about it if the decisions were left with those now appeasing before the Board in the role of advisors, but with Judge Robb at the helm the problem will be dealt with as satisfactorily as possible under the circumstances.

A One Hundredth Birthday is a pretty important event and it is gratifying to learn that responsible officials are taking steps to see that the occasion is fittingly celebrated. Next year Haldimand County will celebrate it's Centennial and it is the hope of the committee that all former residents of the County will return on a specified week to join in the festivities. It will, of course, be necessary to advise all former residents of the plans ahead and in order to do that the committee must have names and addresses. The assistance of all County residents is asked to compile a complete list. So set down tonight and put the names and addresses on paper of all former residents that you know about.
