IT'S MOTHER KEEPS A FAMILY TOGETHER
Here is Dominating Influence, Social Welfare Report Says

London - (CP) - A mother's character is the most dominating influence on a family, says a social welfare report entitled "The Neglected Child and His Family."

It is written by a committee which investigated home conditions among underprivileged children. It reports that in looking at these problem families there emerges one dominating feature: the capacity of the mother. It is she who stands out of the motherly to the household.

"It is her calibre that matters. A feeble or drunken father influences the economic situation of the family, and detracts from the emotional security of the child. Yet it was remarked again and again that the mother's deficiencies were not the determining factor in the child's fate."
