WHAT'S TO BE DONE ABOUT IT?

THE KEY to maintaining supplies of food and extending them is a programme of soil conservation. Every grain of wheat, every egg. every pound of butter and every piece of beef depends upon an irreducible minimum of earth to produce it. This kind of conservation must start at the hill-top, and follow nature's

Then there is the problem of keeping soils at a sustained level of productivity. In most places this means mixed rotational farming with fertilization. It is worth noting the results which followed adoption of complete soil conservation by farmers in Texas, as reported in the Agricultural News Letter of the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas in 1946. On 12 per cent fewer acres 1,400 farmers produced 49 per cent They increased the production of grain sorghum 62 per cent, corn 30 per cent, legume hay 86 per cent, and peanuts 112 per cent. That is the practical part of feeding the hungry world. There is, in addition, a moral obligation on these plentifully endowed. Ruskin said in his Sesame and Lilies "The order to us is not to feed the deserving hungry, nor the ndustrious hungry, nor the amiable and well-intentioned hungry, but simply to feed the hun-For the time being, it is said in the FAO report on World Food Supply, the problem is still one of stretching every resource in the food exporting countries to prevent famine and alleviate hunger abroad. And Vogt adds: "Hungry people are not likely to be willing to suffer slow processes of democracy. Freedom seems far less important when ones belly is rub bing one's backbone - and the Man on Horseback, or the man on the red-starred tank, takes on plausibility as a leader out of the wilder-

This brings us to the question of distribution of such food supplies as we have. Lack of foreign exchange may make it difficult for many countries to import the food they need, and it is imperative that the supplying nations make it possible for the needy nations to buy. poorer countries cannot master the problem or meet the challenge alone,' says the FAO report. "All nations will gain by world advances in human health and well-being, and in production and trade, and all must participate in bringing As far back as January, 1944, the President of this Bank said in an address: "I personally believe that large outright gifts of food, raw material, finished goods and machinery to backward and devastated countries will in the long run, and even from the most selfish point of view, not only contribute most to human welfare, but both in the short and long run be in the best interests of those nations which can afford to make the gifts. If this is, too much to expect of human beings in their present stage of develoment, the alternative must be loans on a very large scale on long and easy terms, or probably a combination of both loans and gifts."

NO MORE FENCE FEUDS-A NEW SENTIMENT is springing up these days around the old line fence, giving rise to an improved spirit of rural goodwill.

It's a far cry from the days, still remembered by the fathers and the grandfathers of the present generation of farm youth, when the Iocation of line fences touched off some of the bitterest disputes and family feuds ever known in the farming settlements.

In those-not-so-good old times, every foot of cleared land had to be won from the wilderness by backbreaking toil. Much of the work of land clearing was done by hand and often the task of removing the trees, stumps, roots and boulders from a field extended over several sea-

Small wonder, then, that a man jealously guarded each precious acre of his clearing in the bush - or that an unscrupulous settler sometimes tried to claim land that a neighbor's hard work had prepared for the plow. Services of a surveyor were hard to come by and disagreements over the proper placing of a line fence created bitter enmity between families who could have found benefit in being friends. Worse still, the boundary feuds often carried over from one generation to another.

When farms were handed down from father to son, the old markings of their limits remained, some good and some bad. In most cases, no necessity arose for surveying or resurveying and the old fine fence stayed put.

But in the last few years, changes have come over many sections of the countryside. Farms have been passing entirely or in part out of the control of families who originally held them. Sale of the property has entailed title searches, surveys and the exact determination of farm

With the lines fixed by the latest scientific methods, sturdy fences go up to protect the owner's fields and to prevent his stock from wandering into gardens or grainfields of a neighbor's holdings. And once the source of dis-
