

SPORTS

Three years ago Rocky Graziano was banished—on account of various delinquencies, misdemeanors and so forth—from New York rings. Eight fans whose memories travel back that far will probably recall that, at the time, it looked very much as though the banishment would be permanent.

For there wasn't the slightest doubt that Rocky had a bad, bad boy. His record in war and in peace, the ring and out of it, was—to put it mildly—pedicular. Excepting for one quality, Graziano had about as much chance of ever again appearing before a Manhattan fight mob as well as Joe Stalin has of being elected president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

But that particular quality happened to be exactly the one which, in the fight racket, covers all the sins in the entire calendar. Rocky Graziano could always draw the cash customers in high-paying quantities; and what between his reputation of sour lights and an increasing number of boxing bugs who preferred to take the sport in comfort, over the tales and acts of his ilk were badly needed.

Then, later, when reporters asked Rocky how he thought he would do against a man his own size and weight—Champion Jake LaMotta for example, Graziano somehow or other seemed to lose his cockiness. "After all, me and Jake LaMotta is a whole lot of people to get a big, sweet, lovable kid—more stoned against than sinning, is probably the trifle too far. We, personally, have seen Rocky in the Polo Grounds, and he's a big, sweet, lovable kid—more stoned against than sinning, is probably the trifle too far. We, personally, have seen Rocky in the Polo Grounds, and he's a big, sweet, lovable kid—more stoned against than sinning, is probably the trifle too far."

But this, like all proper sport tales except a few that the late Ring Lardner wrote—has a happy ending. A week or so ago, as he strode ringwards in the Polo Grounds, his head swung from side to side, and his black eyes seemed to be—and probably were—engaged in the good old custom of mentally "counting the house."

What those eyes saw must have been reassuring. For there were just a few short of thirty-two thousand sports lovers and the shouts which rang in his ears were, on the whole, friendly. Thirty-two thousand are a whole lot of people to stonify a non-fight figure of any kind these days—and that was what Rocky was engaged in, his opponent Charlie Fusari belonging to another stratum of boxing society, the welterweight division.

Rocky's three years of exile hadn't dented the balloon of his self-confidence to any noticeable degree. "I'll take care of the animal in one round or less" was his boast, and he tore out of his corner with a scowl on his countenance as though he expected Fusari to jump the ropes from sheer fright.

Fusari, however, just plain refused to score. And for the biggest part of the first nine rounds Mr. Graziano looked as though he had forgotten his own name. He fought with the self-confidence of his swings misfired by at least half a foot, and he was, in a word, slumped at his shifter opponent that he fell flat on his face.

All the while Fusari was doing a neat job of pinning; on the Graziano features, scoring with left jabs and opening eyes and speed has been developed. The weighing is done through electrical impulses. When certain buttons are pressed, the weight, number and type of animal, name of the weigher and selling agency, and the date and time of weighing are automatically printed. The scale is accurate to within five pounds on loads up to 32,000 pounds.

The Cadillac has a new, higher-compression engine. However, the ailments of the 1948 model were retained as the car was completely altered for that model.—Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

Fusari gamely got up; but by now Rocky had too much strength. He kept Charlie trapped against the ropes, wedged into a corner and—according to some observers—literally choking him to another round, and while banging him unmercifully with the other. (He might very well have been disarmed—but somehow or other, those crowd-drawers and mob-pleasers don't appear to disqualify as readily as less colorful boxers.)

So the fight was stopped, and victory given to Graziano, with fifty-six seconds still to go in the tenth round. Rocky's reaction to victory was typical of the man. "Don't do a real job on them wetterweights?" he crowed delightfully—completely overlooking the fact that he, as a middleweight, had enjoyed a 12 pound edge in the weights, and that it was the referee that had stopped the fight, not he that stopped Fusari.

THE FARM FRONT

There's nothing sadder, according to the old saying, "but death and taxes." Maybe so. But I wouldn't mind making a small wager that there are at least a couple of things almost as sure as the certainties in the saying.

First is that along about next February, you will be listening carefully to your radio, you would hear somebody saying "I'm Longing for a White Christmas" or "the Holy Night." Possibly both.

Second — that if you scanned all the Farm Columns published throughout the land, along about this season you would find some advice about how to store fruit and vegetables for winter use. Now that you've been warned, you can either read or take a second look at our Fall Fair Pictures. The advice which follows is that of D. V. Fisher, a Federal Department of Agriculture specialist.

Freshness and flavour can be retained, and wastage reduced to a minimum by careful attention in providing the correct temperature and humidity conditions necessary for good storage. A room that can be held at approximately 40 degrees, and at a relative humidity of 80 to 90 per cent provides generally satisfactory storage for most fruit and vegetables.

If the homeowner is fortunate enough to have a cool frost-free basement or a cool provision room, he can store his winter supply of potatoes, carrots, beets, turnips, onions and apples with a minimum of care. This room should preferably be insulated from the rest of the house and placed on the north side of the building with a window which can be opened and closed.

The room should contain a thermometer and in fall and spring weather, the window opened at night and closed in the day to obtain the advantage of cool night air. In the winter time the windows may be slightly opened or kept entirely closed as required to keep temperature from dropping below about 38 deg. F, which is as low as potatoes should be stored.

Even with proper control of temperature, commodities such as cabbage, carrots, beets, turnips and apples suffer severely from wilting if not protected from low humidity.

How to Finish

Here's how to convert FIVE-GALLON OIL CAN INTO A HANDY CARRYALL FOR TOOLS. Simply cut the can on the dotted lines. Then bend the two halves over so that the BACKS MEET. THEN MAKE A HANDLE WITH A LENGTH OF WIRE OR METAL STRIP BY HOODING EACH END UNDER THE INSIDE OF THE BENT PORTION OF THE OIL-CAN-TURNED TOOLBOX.

TO AVOID "BAD FATIGUE" CAUSED BY STANDING ON A LADDER FOR LONG PERIODS, RIG UP A SMALL HARDWOOD PLATFORM TO STAND ON. USE HEAVY PIECES OF FLAT IRON BENT TO THE SHAPE SHOWN.

The humidity of the storage room can be maintained at a fairly satisfactory level by keeping damp peat moss or sawdust under a slatted floor.

However, even under these conditions carrots, turnips and beets suffer from shrivelling and these vegetables should be placed in boxes and covered with slightly damp straw or peat moss so as just to cover the top layer. Stored in this way, carrots may be removed in fresh, bright turgid condition in May. The window in the storage room should be darkened as much as possible to prevent sprouting and greening of potatoes, onions and carrots.

For the city apartment family who buy their vegetables only a few days ahead of use, the refrigerator vegetable crisper should be used freely to maintain freshness of leafy vegetables. Carrots, beets, turnips and cabbage should be left in as cool a place as possible, and enclosed in cellophane bags or other fairly moisture proof containers to reduce shrivelling to a minimum. Proper care of fresh produce reduces waste and improves palatability.

P.S.—I don't know what "Turgid" means either, but that's what the man said.

REAL SERVICE
 A man boarded a train at New York and told the porter: "Now, porter, here's $5. I want you to wake me tomorrow morning and get me off this train at South Bend. I sleep heavily, and I'll fight you and tell you anything to go on sleeping, but get me off this train at South Bend."

The porter thanked him and promised the man he'd get him off at South Bend for sure. However, the next day the man woke up in Chicago, with South Bend far behind. He stomped up to the porter, who was talking to the conductor, and told him off in no uncertain terms before he went to get a train back to South Bend.

"My, that man was angry," said the conductor.

"That nothing," said the porter. "You should of heard the man I did get off at South Bend."

From police daybook in Milwaukee: See the bulletin board for the list of officers to shoot for target practice.

And then—well, either Fusari just plain ran out of gas, or else Rocky managed to get a refill from somewhere. Graziano, with his bleeding mouth wide open in that old-fashioned snarl kept booting in, hurting Fusari now, finally slamming Charlie into the ropes and clubbing him on the floor.

Fusari gamely got up; but by now Rocky had too much strength. He kept Charlie trapped against the ropes, wedged into a corner and—according to some observers—literally choking him to another round, and while banging him unmercifully with the other. (He might very well have been disarmed—but somehow or other, those crowd-drawers and mob-pleasers don't appear to disqualify as readily as less colorful boxers.)

So the fight was stopped, and victory given to Graziano, with fifty-six seconds still to go in the tenth round. Rocky's reaction to victory was typical of the man. "Don't do a real job on them wetterweights?" he crowed delightfully—completely overlooking the fact that he, as a middleweight, had enjoyed a 12 pound edge in the weights, and that it was the referee that had stopped the fight, not he that stopped Fusari.

DO FOOD DYES CAUSE CANCER?

In 1895 Prof. Ludwig Rehn called the attention of German scientists to the fact that out of forty-five workers in Frankfurt on the Main and in an aniline-dye plant three had succumbed to cancer of the bladder. His observations were verified later in Germany, Switzerland and England. When the United States entered World War I, and began to make its own dyes, cut off from Germany as it was, American statistics of bladder cancer in aniline-dye workers added more evidence.

Today, aniline, azo and other coal-tar dyes are recognized cancer-causers. All are synthetic, and most of them have no counterparts in nature. There are about 600,000 compounds of carbon which were unknown a century ago, and of these several hundred can generate cancers of the liver, bladder, stomach, lungs or other organs. Of the dyes the one that has been studied most thoroughly is "but-ter yellow," so-called because of its color. Mix it with the food of a rat, and cancer of the liver invariably follows in the absence of protective agents.

Inspired by the work done with organic cancer-causers and with special reference to the studies of Rehn and his successors, Prof.

TABLE TALKS

by Jane Andrews

An Ontario woman, Mrs. C. Jeremy of Coldwater, Ont., won a prize of $100 at the Canadian National Exhibition just because she baked the best apple pie—or rather two of them—in the opinion of the judges. There were 17 judges—16 male and one female baker—and they had to select the best from 58 different entries.

Probably you've heard all about this long ago; but I thought you might like to see, and cut out, the recipe for what the judges said was "the best pie they had ever tasted anywhere." So here you have it.

For two pies Mrs. Jeremy always uses:
 3 1/2 cups of flour
 1/2 lb. of lard and shortening mixed
 1/2 tsp. salt
 1 tsp. white sugar
 Never any soda or baking powder. Dampens dough with milk and

1/2 teaspoon ginger
 1/2 teaspoon cloves
 3 eggs
 1 cup Crown Brand Corn Syrup
 1 1/2 cups cooked pumpkin
 1 1/2 cups undiluted evaporated milk

Method
 Mix sugar and spices in a bowl. Add eggs and beat slightly. Add remaining ingredients; blend well. Pour into 8-inch pie pan lined with pastry rolled 3/4 inch thick and having a high fluted edge. Bake in hot oven for 1 1/2 hours, or until silver knife inserted in centre of filling comes out clean.

Just in case you don't happen to feel like making pastry you can do a very nice "switchee" with that same PUMPKIN PIE CUSTARDS recipe by making
 It's very simple. You just pour it into a custard cup, or into a tart
