CHRONICLES GINGER FARM

To us this Sunday is eventfulit marks the first Sunday of our Darby and Joan existence; it is the last Sunday of the year on which we enjoy (?) daylight saving time, and it is Partner's birthday. It is also a very restful Sunday after a decidedly hectic week. What with one thing and another we had late nights and extra busy days all last week so we don't mind a quiet day at all. Not that we expected it to be quiet - Partner's brother and his wife from Mattawa were supposed to arrive but something upset their plans so the visit has been postponed. Another brother, living in Toronto, left for England last Thursday, so, with Bob away up north the Clarke family seems to be on the move. Except us-as long as there are cows to look after I guess this family stays pretty well put.

Incidentally, that of course, what some folk object to most in connection with farming-that is. one man put it, tied absolutely to the cow's tails! Which we must admit is true. Whether you keep two cows or twenty the result i the same-you have to be there to look after them. Milk distributors have it arranged so that there is no Sunday delivery of milk in the cities-now if only the milk could be shut off at the source how convenient that would be. Or would it? Come to think of it it might not seem such a good idea when the bi monthly milk cheque came along.

Well, with all this wonderful weather we are having it is hard to realise that Christmas is only a few weeks away-even though Toronto did have its monster Santa Claus parade yesterday. How I do enjoy that broadcast-the bands, and the children shouting and laughing with excitement. That is one time when it would be nice to have television would really want to deny children that delightful and colourful event? I have a feeling that most children accept the Santa Claus phantasy for just exactly what it is-a make-be lieve story that fits in with all the colour and excitement of the Christ mas season. Children are essentially young realists and while they like to play "Let's pretend" I doubt if many of them have any illusions about Jolly Old Santa.

By the way, I wonder how many of you people are interested in house-plants? About ninety per cent, I would say! And while you are interested in them as plants have you realized what an important part they play in social lifehow they promote friendliness and good fellowship? One might even say they are good social ice-break ers. Why do I say that? Well, among other things, Partner was doing a bit of canvassing last week and I had the job of driving him around, and at some houses I went in with him . . . and while Partner was talking to the man of the house chatted with his wife. Two of se ladies I knew only slightly but because they had rather unusual house-plants we were soon away to a good start and ready to talk for the rest of the afternoon In fact I came away with slips and little rootlets that it would have been ungracious to refuse. The first time Partner made no comment, the second time he remarked -"And what do you think you are doing? Every place we call you come away with a mysterious parcel." The lady of the house laughed. "Just cacti," she explained, "anyone interested in cacti can always do with a few new varieties." And
