Pen, Scissors and Pastepot

We have it on reliable authority that there is a killer in our neighborhood. The killer apparently has our "Photo" as her object. Yes, it is a female killer — and they say they are deadly. We know it will be difficult to understand how it would be possible for anyone to have any such intentions toward "Photo" with the exception, possibly, of that time when she consumed the carcass of our neighbour's deer fresh from the northwoods. But in this case it is different. Her madame, it seems, has been her endeavour to recover a few of the T-bone steak bones disposed of in the garage can of another neighbour. One would almost think that anyone who can afford T-bone steaks in this day and age would not deny a friendly disposed animal like "Photo" the bones of a T-bone steak. Such apparently, is the case.

Not having been given that great blessing of a pair of hands, like human beings, "Photo" naturally, cannot do anything to remove the trash from a garage can and remove those choice morsels (T-bone steak bones) that even some less fortunate human beings would be glad to lick the remaining morsels of meat from. Consequently she must resort to those facilities she has been given to obtain them. We know for a fact she pushes the garbage can over gently and she has touched with evidence of the slightest dent in it. Furthermore, we will vouch for her in this respect too that if the T-bone steak bones are deposited at the top of the garbage can nothing else will be disturbed.

We want to add a warning to our neighbour with murderous intent in her heart. Lend a cautious eye to the weather when you feel inclined to take a swipe at "Photo" with the kitchen broom. You are perfectly safe when the weather is dry and safe when the ground is a bit icy. But there is no frost in the air. But take caution if it is slippery underneath. We remember seeing a person taking a swipe at a dog one time when the ground was a bit icy. The dog fell to the ground and the person was injured. The dog was a bit of a nuisance, but the person was a bit of a nuisance too.

To the Editor of Pen, Scissors and Pastepot:
The London Free Press had this to say in referring to the death of the great Irish playwright, George Bernard Shaw:
"ERIN FOREVER"

Stan Mitchell says

"If you are adequately protected, you can lock up your worries with your life insurance policies"

The rector would not agree that Shaw was an atheist. If he was, why had he paid to have the village church rebuilt and subscribed annually to church funds? He asked "No he was not an atheist" Davies said. "I would rather call him an Irishman." (End of quote)
How much longer, Mr. Editor, must the Irish put up with such insults? How about starting a little rebellion to give the Irish their just reward? Shaw?
