was wishing we could have just a little more snow. We got it all but it wasn't "just a little." Now the lane has filled in to much for me to attempt taking he car out-although I noticed a picture in the paper the other day showing a little English car like ours making its way gaily through deep snow while bigger cars were getting stuck. Just for fun I would like to see what our car would do. In fact I would try it if it were not for giving Partner the trouble of hauling me out, sup-

Trying to heat the house against high winds and zero temperature is hard enough when we are alone but to have visitors and not be able to keep them warm and comfortable is a headache. For one thing people always feel the cold more away from home, asthey are naturally less active with no ordinary every-day chores to do.

Well, for goodness sakes, it isn't and friendly people. but our visitors themselves. At Man Who Went Back chugging up the lane-whether it gets through or not is a question. Bye for now.

Partner's brother Cofin and his wife Jessie arrived on our doorstep, carefree and happy, apparently in had graduated together from Tothe best of health and prepared to enjoy a quiet family week-end. We sat around talking until nearly twelve o'clock and then went to bed. Sometime during the night lovely scenery. With her help, Colin called out to me-"Come David will show them to his college Gwen, come and look at Jessie . . . there's something wrong . . . she can't speak to me". There was indeed something wrong. Poor Jessie was quite un-conscious. We sent for the doc-tor—and he had to walk up our to the spot where I was wounded," he promised. So they crossed the Channel and the tandem headed for long lane at 12 below zero. Unfortunately, he said there was nothing he could do unil she regained sciousness and that we had better make preparations for getting her to hospital first thing in the morning. Preparations included getting a snowplough to open the lane; an ambulance to take her to hospital: long distance calls to her daughters and to maintain a constant watch at her bedside. By ten next morning Jessie was in hospital bed and receiving the best of care. Colin came back to dinner as he felt he was only in the way and could be no help at all. Shortly after dinner he was recalled to the hospital . . . his wife was sinking fast. Hurry . . . how we wanted to hurry! But the car wouldn't start-12 below had been too much for it. There are all

FEBRUARY

There are a good many thing hat might be said about February but the more pertinent ones should be set forth in very fine print. For February has some extremely bad habits. Its reputation is not of the best, despite its famous birthdays and its midmonth festival of love. It starts out with Ground Hog Day. and it'ends on the eve of March, and though it has a minimum of days between it usually manages to pack those days with an assort ment of weather that is, to say the least, trying to a body that has just endured January. February is something less than nature's pampered darling.

sphere where February is the beginning of spring, places where mockingbirds sing and swamp maples turn livid with bloom. But not in this latitude. There are also places, beyond the equator to the south, where February is midsummer, with heat that blisters and drought that burns. But not here. girl friends-and you know that February in these parts is the executioner of the mischief which January lacked time or temper to com-February, is the month of snow liberally mixed with ice. And its winds are the blasts of January partaking of the whimsy of March. February is the problem child of ary beams. How else could the legend of Ground Hog Day have arisen and persisted? February even brings flowers, sometimes. Such flowers as snowdrops. And some eager souls can see spring in a snowdrop. Such persons still have a bit to learn about February, about spring, and about snowdrops. For instance, that snowdrops and snowflakes have more than a wodding But February passes, as do all difficulties again. Knowing we things good and bad. February yields to March, in due time. And no matter what else you can say about March, it turns into April. Stated that way, it's rather simple.

However, for managers, coaches and other close students of the game it should be a boon as it would seem to cover the subject like a tarpaulin. Still, at that, in looking over a list of the chapter headings we notice one that is missing which might very well have been included.

That would be a chapter on "How to tell a Referee exactly what you think of him and still not get tossed out on your Frances," but we recondite subject like this would be taken up in the Post Graduate course. The same Mr. Percival has creat-

So, if you were to ask us how we would rate Gordie Howe and Richard we would try and duck the issue. But if you asked us which of the two we would choose, were we the owner of a team, our pick would be The Rocket, simply because he probably personally draws twice as much money into the box-office, both at home and away, as does his Detroit rival. But that, of course, is taking a base commer-cial view of the matter, and proves that we have no place in a sportfor-sport's-sake sport as present-day
