THOSE RESOLUTIONS —

THE POLISH has hardly worn off the New Year, and the shine is still on the faces of those good citizens who made New Year's resolutions and so far haven't broken any.

We've got a sneaking regard for the fellow whose one resolution was not to make any resolutions. He's got nothing to lose. It's a fascinating subject. We'd like to know, for instance, what Marshal Stalin or Mao Tse-Tung had in their resolution lists. You can bet there was nothing good for us. Come to think of it, they were probably too busy blue-pencilling the resolutions of their subordinates to make a set of their own. But there's one thing common to East and West in New Year's resolutions. It's the dictionary definition, that "good resolutions are intentions that one formulates mentally for virtuous conduct." You don't have to write them - just so long as you remember them. That's nice for the folks behind the Iron Curtain, where it dould be dangerous to make written records. However, it's the ordinary resolutions made ordinary people that count in the long run.

If they're any good at all, you don't hear about Save us from the man who proudly displays a long list of beautiful sentiments in the fond expectation that others are interested. Old Samuel Johnson put it in a rather large nutshell: "Every man naturally persuades himself that he can keep his resolutions, nor is he convinced of his imbecility but by length of form resolutions, and they who are becoming cunning do not tell them." We're not telling ours either, but we're passing along what we think is a short and sen-

Not to eat, or drink, more than you can stomach; not to spend more than you earn; not to drive recklessly; not in any way to injury others.

You've made lots of other resolutions, no doubt, but those four make a pretty good foundation for this first year of the half-century. And if everyone used the fourth one, what a heautiful world this would be.

IN THE RELENTILESS SWEEP of 20th-century progress, many of the things long chrished by youth have disappeared. They won't be back.

So you can wave farewell—with a tear in your eye and a bolt on memory's door—to such mundane things as the slowly-vanishing train whistle, the wooden last and the old-time butcher.

The train whistle for instance. What small boy hasn't stood in the autumn darkness, the crisp, chill smell of late fall around him and thrilled to the leng-drawn out WHOO-WHOO-Whoo-whoo of the fast freight high-balling through town? That was the voice of romance, of far places, of commerce lashioning a new land, of a future to be sampled and then eventually partaken of by any voung listener.

Now we have, and will have more of, the squawk of the disease of the squawk of the disease of the squawk of the disease of the squawk of the fast streight high-balling through town? That was the voice of romance, and the group of the squawk of the disease of the squawk of the fast streight high-balling faced piece of wood about five feet long—is a thing of the past. What they call lathing now heave, and the square proposal square s
