"In addition to my playing dutes, I'm also backfield coach. Naturally, it would be difficult for me to play and coach and my coaching duties consist mostly of figuring out plays. Once practice starts I'm just another player. Because of my experierce with pro ball in the States, it's more of a consulting position. The reason I wanted the job was so I could give my own views without embarrassment.

"That's an important factor, beeve me. I think there's a growing tendency in sports to emphasize the importance of coaches. Many of em say they did this or that when really it's the team, the players, that make the coach. That's why it's a relief to talk to someone like eve Owen of the New York Giants who readily admits that you have to have the material to make the team go.

"In the majority of circumstance the coaches are merely impressed with their importance. They try to play football like a checkers game. Instead of dealing with human beings, it's like dealing with robots. The only successful exception I can think of is Paul Brown of the Cleveland Browns.
