Take the T.T.C. Strike. Fhere you have major transportation difficulties. But in the country we have our traffic problems too—as [knew only too well last Saturday—especially in regard to parking From cially in regard to parking. From what I have seen in small towns There have always here the available parking space falls tar short of the number of cars that want to park. To a cars that want to park. To a "native" it is annoying: to a stranger it is confusing. As you drive slowly down the street the only open space you find is either a driveway or space reserved for only open space you find is either a driveway or space reserved for a fire hydrant. Recently an additional fire hydrant was installed on our main street. I always forget it is there and gleefully head for the empty space. I drive in—and there's the hydrant. The other day one local radio of the space our local police officer was there. He had his back to me but turned round just as I was backing out, Late yesterday afternoon when I went down town, heavy, wet now was falling. The only parking space I could find at all was between two cars at different angles. I looked at the space . . . well, my car is small, I guessed I could make it. And I did. By flattening myself pretty well I was even able to get out of the car. Before I left I went round to see how much out of the car. Before I left I went round to see how much space was left on the other side. Only a few inches separated my car from the one that was parked on such an awkward angle. Oh well, maybe the owner of that car will be gone by the time I get back—and get-ting out will be lis worry. I thought. But it wasn't gone need thought. But it wasn't gone, no was the one on my left, Cars and trucks were coming along the street in quick succession; the snow was so wet the wipers couldn't clear the windshield properly; the rear window was blanketted with snow, all of which added to my troubles in trying to back without scraping fenders. Getting out of a ight spot like that is not my idea fun especially if some superior nale takes a delight in standing on the sidewalk to watch my manoevvres—and that has happened more than once. One time I challenged a man to come and back the car out for me if he thought he could do a better job—that time being crowded in wasn't my fault. He didn't accept the challenge—he didn't know how to handle an English car! However on Saturday everybody was too busy minding their own business to worry about me-the storm was getting worse all the time. So, without any onlookers and the miniature luggernaut to make me nervous, and with much experimental twisting and turning, I finally managed, inch by inch, to get myself out, more convinced than ever that something needs to be done to relieve congested parking. What, I hardly know. A parking lot? But where? Country towns were not laid out to provide for central parking lots. The only place is underground or overhead. Of course, in some towns there are a few antiquated stores that might has better out of the research of t be done to relieve congested parkbe better out of the way and the space given over to parking.
