This is one of those predicaments where to do nothing is the wisest course to take-and the hardest.

I expect his wife does love him, but with a jealous, possessive love that, sooner or later, may consume itself. It would be such a relief to let the boy know how well you understand, and assure him that his happiness is all that matters. Yet you can let him feel your sympathy without putting it into words. After all, what could he do but apologize for his wife? That would make you more miserable than you

As time goes on, he will, I * expect, resent his wife's un-kindness more and more deep-ly. He may feel, one day, that he has to take a stand against it, declare his loyalty to his parents, and visit you as often as he wants to, even though he must come alone. But that day.

Last Monday we had to call a "vet" to one of our cows. She was not exactly sick but so full anything could have happened. LEISCHMANN CAST RISING DRY YEAST

THE Calvert SPORTS COLUMN

by Elmer Ferguson

Hundreds of hockey followers cheered silently when, a few weeks ago, six new nom nees to the mythical Hockey Hall of Fame included such semi-moderns as "Old Poison" Nels Stewart, and free-wheeling Bill Cook. Six in all were named, and the other four, while not so well known to modern followers of the game, revived nosta gic memories among older enthusiasts who remember hockey in its iormative years. For the names of "Dickie" Boon, "Moose" Goheen, "Mickey" MacKay and "Moose" Johnson were as well known in their day as the Richards, Howes, and other stars of today.

It is extraordinary that the gentlement who make these nom-inations should have overlooked Stewart so long. For it is 12 years since he completed hockey's most productive chore, by scor-ing 324 goals in 15 seasons of play with three different clubs.

It is 26 years since Stewart scored 34 goals in his first year, when only 36 games were played, a mark never since achieved by any rookie, won the Hart trophy his first year, and led his Montreal Maroon team to the Stanley Cup and the O'Brien Cup. We claim that no such combination of feats has ever been recorded before, and possibly never will again.

They called him Old Poison because this big, seemingly indolent player who skated with such deceptive laziness was sheer poison to goalers, and baffling to defense players. For an entire season, Stewart fooled practically everybody. He skated so casually, in his easy-going way, into the midst of things, and suddenly, the puck would be nestling in the opposing nets, and Stewart would be credited with another goal. And the dead-panned centre would skate slowly away, still chewing thoughtfully on his gum. Stewart was a big fellow. Six feet in height, he weighed 200 pounds, was a gire to a degree, and opposing players who , year after year, tried to shoulder him out of scoring range found themselves bouncing off his stalwart frame. He had thick, powerful wrists, was quick as a cat when the puck hit his stick, and could whip it away with uncanny accuracy.

Bill Cook was the trigger-man for Rangers Cook-Boucher Cook line, one of the finest in hockey history. A swinging, long-striding skater, Cook seemed to be skating in circles, but that was the type of play this threesome used so effectively. This forward line slid passes while going full speed, and always there was someone there to pick up the pass, and throw a deadly accurate shot. Mostly these apparent's pointless passes found their way to Bill's stick, and then it was every goaler for himself. Cook played until he was in his 40's. On durability alone, he rated something.
