of the three rinks on the modest circuit possessed artificial ice. But, in the comparatively brief span of 35 years since the League came into being as a modest four-club, all-Canadian league, some of the outstanding advances and changes have been: The League weathered two world-enguling wars and became international in scope, the only major international professional sports organization in the entire world.

The playing rules have been almost completely revolutionized, aspeed up play, and eliminate halts. Player's salaries have soared to ten times the average paid

Every club in the great international league plays in a lux-urious rink, fully-equipped with modern artificial ice-plants, as against the natural-ice conditions which were in the majority when the League was organized. Play speeded up by many hundred per cent from the old days. when replacements were few, and speed lagged at the end, on is often water-covered. New rules, zoning, forward passes and is creased man-power accomplished this.

Elimination of brutal play, that at times threatened the well-being of bockey, by rules that, while still allowing a maximum of clean robust play and heavy bodily contacts, eliminate vicious attacks by heavy penalties. A National League Pensions Society has made hockey a career for its major players, instead of a mere seasonal occupation. Players bonuses and play-off guarantees have replaced the old percentage system, neutral linesmen officiate in every League game, the all-star game has become an annual and popular feat For three years, after the original, all-Canadian four-club circuit of Montreal Wanderers and Canadian, Ottawa Senators and Quebec Bulldogs were formed, there was little change in the circuit. The Quebec club dropped out immediately after the League was formed, and was replaced by Toronto, but re-entered for one season, 1919-20. Hamilton, the sporting Ontario city, replaced Quebec in 1920-21, and remained until 1924-25.

Then came the Big Parade to internationalism. Overnight, the League mushroomed to greatness. And in 1947-48 it played to 2,518,042 paid customers. Next: The international story.

MOUNTAIN LAUREL -From Countrymon's Year, by Haydn S. Pearson_

WHEN the colonists began to clear the woodlands for their homes and farms, they came upon a shrub with lustrous green leaves that they believed was a variety of the laurel tree so common in England. It was natural that they called it after the home-country shrub. As time went on and the pioneers grew accustomed to its beautiful blossoms, someone with imagination thought that the blossoming plant looked as though it were covered with a profusion of colorful scraps of calico, and today in certain areas it is called "calico bush." Early settlers made wooden spoons from the matured branches to stir the boiling sorghum In their big iron kettles, so "spoonwood" became another name i American mountain laurel. Kalmia latifolia.

Laurel in bloom is a carpet of loveliness laid for a time over the thin soil of a rocky hillgide, pasture slope, or craggy ravine. It's magic rug in the shady places where trees or overhanging hills throw dim shadows during part of the day. The five-lobed pink or white saucer-shaped flower with purple dots cluster at the ends of twisting sturdy branches. Framed by the glossy, rich, dark green leaves, the total effect is a bouquet of exquisite beauty.

From Maine to Georgia and westward to Ohio, the calico bush is a part of the beauty of spring. Birds delight in its tangled security: small wild folk find shelter in its dark recesses. Mountain laurel, strong growing, ever green and generous with its loveliness, is one of Nature's good gifts to man.

five men in two days' hunting were able to take but three." In the Eighteen Eighties, 100,000 California quail were shipped to market annually. "The curve of the quail population has declined to perhaps 10% of its maximum." In one Minnesota town, gunners shot 3,000 hawks in one day "and these were broadwings, the most beneficial . . . in our entire bird fauna." "Sportsman's Country" is also a-threnody for the America that has been and might be again. It is written by a naturalist, who is at heart a poet, to the land which bore him, the rich and fair and desecrated land. The author presents each area whole, geo-graphically and biologically, but his understanding fervor gives every chapter memorable beauty that mere description never could bestow. More scrupulously than most men, Mr. Peattie follows the Ancient Mariner's prescripwhen he gets involved in a dog tion for efficacious prayer.
