few hours one morning, followed by what appeared to be an aerial survey. At least, an aeroplane was flying back and forth, back and forth, changing its course a little each time. So what?

One way and another we have just concluded a busy week.

Sixteen loads of gravel were spread on the lane and in the yard — which did not leave us much change out of a hundred dollars. Then we heard the latest cattle market prices and wondered whether we should have spent the money. Not having any crop, we also had straw to buy last week — and a man

THE Calvert SPORTS COLUMN

by Elmer Ferguson

At first glance, you get the idea it would have been a great thing for sport in America, a fine thing to cement international friendships, if Emil Zatopek, the champion runner of the Olympic Games, had accepted an invitation from officials of the government of the United States, endorsed by President Truman, to visit this continent and show the citizens of democracy the unmatched speed and endurance that swept him to three Olympic crowns.

Now we're glad Zatopek didn't accept. For, as it turned out, he is a mere tool of the Soviet's efforts to seize even upon the Olympics as a medium for propaganda.

For the Olympic flame that burned so brightly above Helsinki was barely extinguished before Zatopek was in front of a microphone making propaganda for the Russians—who had used their ruthless technique to send his fellow-countryman John Masaryk to death through a high window and to convert Masaryk's—and Zatopek's—once proud and free Czechoslovakia into a virtual slave state.

a virtual slave state.

In commenting on the Games that had so signally honoured him—Games to foster international co-operation and global sportsmanship, Zatopek asserted: "It is too bad the American interventionist generals in Korea would not even stop fighting for the Olympic Games."

And when he refused to accept the invitation to visit the circus."

So we can get along very well, without Zatopek. He has automatically barred himself. It is regrettable Soviet Russia should use international sport for political purposes.

It is doubly shameful that it obtained the help of Emil Zatopek, native of a country that once held its head high among the free nations of that world. And quite as shameful that Zatopek consented to accede to such a shameful role.

In winning the 5000-meter, 10,000-meter and marathon races at the Olympic Games, this 29-year-old Czech Army officer proved himself beyond doubt one of the most magnificent athletes in history.

himself beyond doubt one of the most magnificent athletes in history.

This remarkable man is the P. T. Barum of track and field. He puts on a show that would be the envy of a John Barrymore. He runs with his head hitched over his left shoulder, his face wrapped in agony, his fists clenched, elbows bent in a fighting position. His tongue hangs out of his mouth and he appears to be gasping desperately for air.

But all this while his muscular legs are pounding off a steady beat. He staggers and struggles from the waist up, but he is poetry in motion from the hips down.

A great athlete. But a very poor citizen of his own unfortunate country.

So, in case it ever spreads to Canada, we're going to give you the low-down, so that you'll be from the start. Pachinko is the poor man's copy of the pinball machine. It has lured men from mah jong tables, kept them away from the track and ponies, supplanted the lunch hour, lowered student book housewives neglect their babies. It has led to suicides and petty crime. It has become a vital soc ial issue discussed by Japanese psychologists, doctors, teachers, tax collectors. It is a subject of Diet debate. And still it grows.

Pachinko machines stand up-right to save space in crowded Japan. A lever kicks a steel ball, around the board. If the ball falls into one of the nine winning cubicles the player gains ten new balls. An array of nails protects each cavity to make the game more difficult. The operation is entirely manual — no electronic devices, no blazing lights. And the Japanese have yet to learn
