CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM

Here we are—back to normal again after daughter's wedding; back to ordinary every day farm work wondering whether to fill up our cistern—after having cleaned it out—had hoping it won't rain any more for a while because our neighbors still have grain in the stack waiting to be threshed.

It's Easy Sewing!

YOU HAVE A DATE with this! A beauty you'll love to sew. It's blue with perfect fit and simple lines. Even the buttoned cuffs are easy, they're circular, give that softly rippled look. Shown as shown in check-and-solid color or choose a gay print.

time if there has been much rain overnight. First he has had and rail through the wet pasture fields to fetch the cows home—on wet days they are always at the far end of the farm. Then Partner's mood is reflected in the behaviour of the cows. They get contrary, run in and out of the barnyard instead of into the stable, and with every step get a little more plastered with mud. At last they are tied up in their stalls—in what had previously been a clean stable which is now inside of half an hour is anything but. Then I come on the scene and Partner says, "If some of these people who buy milk could see the work and worry we often have in keeping it clean here wouldn't be so much grumbling about the price."

"Well, some people may ask, 'if you are so dissatisfied, why do you farm?' Well, why do we? It is a question we often ask ourselves—because we are tempted to wonder sometimes."

"Perhaps the chief reason, as with a good many other farm folk, is because farming supplies a fundamental need in our nature. The farmer is independent—independent to a greater extent than a man in any other calling. How much a man likes farming depends to a great extent upon how much he values his independence. The farmer is his own boss. He is a success or a failure according to his own skill, ability and ingenuity—which is, except in a depression period, which acts like a quarantine sucking him down however hard he struggles to save himself."

"The farmer doesn't have to punch a time-clock—although he generally works longer hours than those who do. He makes his own time and arranges his work according to the weather or the demands of the season. He doesn't have to wear uniforms or go on strike because someone higher up demands it, or he has to obey restrictions or regulations that he likes—and as much as he likes as little as he hates to be hunched over a desk, he has little to say in what he shall be paid for his produce, although he must conform to government requirements in regard to the quality of whatever he has to sell.

SPUTTING HEADACHE

Keams and reams of stuff have been written and printed regarding the late—and from a Canadian standpoint, un lamented—Olympic hero over at Helsinki. We've read about the Yankee hero who was the Deafening; and the Czechoslovak husband and wife who then cleaned up enough gold medals to make a full set of teeth for Champion Jack Johnson; about this one, and that one, and the other one.

Pawntop For Rich Folks Only

The world's most remarkable pawntop had been opened in the fashionable Champs-Élysées quarter of Paris. Run by the Paris Municipal Council, it is "for titled and wealthy people who would find a visit to the usual pawntop shop with magnificent Oriental works, works of art and fine jewelry, and other objects of no more than ordinary value" are accepted.

Bones Of Columbus

Next month the Dominican Republic will celebrate the 73th anniversary of the discovery of this hidden coast containing the remains of Christopher Columbus. It was found beneath the Cathedral of Santo Domingo on Sept. 10, 1877.
