ANCASTER FAIR
SEPTEMBER 16 AND 17

Hamilton, Sept. 10 - A barrage of feature events marks the two-day annual Ancaster Fall Fair which opens its 102nd event as a "Class B" Fair, following announcement of special Federal Government classification, by Ralph Baker, president of Ancaster Agricultural Society. Selection of "Miss Milk Maid of 1952" takes place Wednesday, September 17th, with a parade of the Milk Maids a feature of the opening ceremonies on Tuesday evening, September 16th. Chairman of judges for the Milk Maids Contest is William Hoyles, president of Toronto Milk Producers Association.

Ellen Fairclough, Canada's only women M.P. will officially open the '52 Fair. Thomas Ross, M.P., cuts the ribbon officially designating the Fair as a "Class B" one. Plans are under way for a grand parade of Junior Farmers and officials headed by Dundas Band, and star entertainer will be young Dezell Kingston, of Chatham whose side-splitting presentation of comedy-tap dance, "Too Old to Cut the Mustard" will be followed by baton-twirling acts.

First prize for the Milk Maid contest is $50.00, donation of directors and some members of Ancaster, Barton-Glanford Milk Producers; $35.00 donation of Ancaster Junior Farmers; $15.00, donation of directors and some members of A-B-G Milk Producers; $5.00 for each entrant, donation of Ancaster Agricultural Society and many merchandise prizes.

Despite pleas of young entrants; "Please, I can milk a cow!", a meeting of Fair committee members, presided over by Gordon Collyer, president A-B-G Milk Producers and Ralph Baker, decided, "rules are rules - once published." So no entrant will be required to milk a cow in the Milk Maid Contest - thus sticking to original plans.

It was a surprise package to the many dairymen and farmers to find so many girls could milk cows.

One poser-problem is to find enough 3-legged milking stools to be carried by the milk maids.

one who has one to loan would do a big favour by calling Roy Moffat R.R. 2, Ancaster (Miller 8-3714). Or hand a 3-legged milking stool to any one of these committee members: Mayes Woodley, Sanford Bonham, Ancaster; John Brigham, Allan Jillard, Glanford; W. G Marritt, Hamilton; Wilfred Wade, Sanford Ferguson, Ancaster.

Highlight of the two-day Fair is the terrific Horse Show of 72 Classification, presented by Hamilton-Wentworth Horse Club, George Pechie, of Hamilton, the general chairman.

Entries are coming from far and near - with many important Canadian stables represented. The horse show opens the fair Tuesday afternoon, continues that evening and there are races both Tuesday and Wednesday.

Memories Of Edmund Pugsley

— By Norman C. Colbert —

PART 4

Odds and ends, part 4 of Mr. Pugsley's story continues)

When the settlers cleared the land of trees, they started near the buildings and worked outward. The result was that the remaining piece of forest was at the back of the farm. Our people, for some reason, left this piece of woods close to the buildings and on the north-west side, where they proved to be a great shelter from the north-west winds. There was no disadvantage, the sheep and cattle were allowed in the woods with the result that no young trees were allowed to grow, and the woods aged rapidly and years ago disappeared.

One day a peculiar looking cat appeared around the buildings. It was very large and had a half tail. It seemed to be hungry, and while it was still under the shed in the yard, the verandah, my father shot it. I am sure it was a wild cat.

Another year there was an extraordinary number of red squirrels about the place, and I shot over fifty with an old Kentucky rifle, although I was not a good shot. That old rifle is still in my possession, and is one of the keepsakes we have. It was bought 111 years ago.

When a boy, my mother used to send me to pick wild strawberries on a new farm, belonging to her brother There were acres and acres of these berries and a lot of people came to pick them. To prevent this a notice "No picking berries here tomorrow" was put up. What effect had the notice?

On the place was a small frame house, often called a shanty, and in this shanty a family of Bohemians lived, and the children went to our school. I remember little about them, except that they were different, from ourselves. That was around seventy years ago. It is interesting that the Bohemians of the world news right now.

Power for the grist mill and the saw mill was obtained from water brought in a sluice from the head of the rapids. In those early days the miller took his pay in a toll on the material ground, one twelfth of a bushel per bushel. I can still see the miller standing at the door with a tiny one-twelfth of a bushel. It is said, and I think correctly, that the Government changed the millers one tenth which was rejected because they thought one-twelfth greater than one-tenth. Correct knowledge of Arithmetic was needed in those days as well as now. The grain was ground between an upper revolving stone, and a lower one. The upper revolving stone was driven into a sort of pattern by a stone-dresser. The quality of the flour depended upon his work. The ground material was passed into a long, slanting, eight-sided, cone shaped structure to be sifted. This structure had wires of suitable cloth. The finer particles passed through the cloth first, and gradually the coarser and coarser ones, the one shading into the other. The first sifting was the best flour, the next the shorts, and the remainder the bran. The farmer brought home his own material, flour, bran, shorts a smaller part, and bran bulky but light in weight.

The Peddlers who came around were always of interest. I can see the tin peddler's wagon with its large box like body, and the exterior glittering with tin pails, dippers, etc., hung on the outside. They would barter too, and the eight or twelve cents we got for a muskrat skin was considered found money. Imagine twelve cents for a prime skin!

The Ash peddler's wagon had a long low, large box to hold the collected ashes. He always carried some bars of coloured hard soap to trade for the wood ashes. These ashes were taken to a center where they were leached, and the lye boiled down to form potash or potashes. This product was mainly potassium bi-carbonate.

The one who peddled matches did not need a large box. The matches were of straight-grained white pine. Each little block was about one and three-quarter inches long by three-quarters of an inch by one inch. The separate matches were split down the block part way, but were held together by the unsplit portion. They were sulphur matches with small, flat, inflammable heads, and were lighted by friction.

When a big boy I had the task of shaving shingles and also the wooden pins that held the framework of a barn together. For this we used a piece of apparatus called a drawhorse. This was a trestle-like stool with a frame on it to clamp or otherwise hold the material on while a draw-knife was being used. To make shingles a straight-grained pine tree was obtained. This was sawn into blocks fifteen or eighteen inches long, depending on length of shingles required. Each block was split into pieces convenient to handle. Then a frow was placed parallel to a straight edge of the end of the block, and three-eighths to one-half inch from the edge. The frow was driven into the end of the block by a mallet, and when sufficiently deep, the handle of the frow was pulled or pushed over to one side, and a small thin board was split from the block. This was repeated until all the blocks were split into these thin pieces, or rived as they called it.

To shave a shingle, it was placed on a slanting board on the draw-horse. The clamp was tightened and the free side smoothed. It was then turned over and the process repeated. Now the shingle was turned end for end, the surface shaved off each side, to form a thin wedge. The edges were trimmed and the shingles was complete. Those shingles were well helped to take the old shingles off a barn we had. These shingles had a very forty year record, and although thin, they still formed a fair roof.

I was amazed and surprised to find the shingles at the peak as thin as those at the eave. This shows that weathering, not running water, wore the shingles away.

The pins for the framework of the barn were made in much the same way, but the block was split into small four-sided pieces, each about one and one-half inches in size. These pins were made eight sided, and point ed at one end. These were generally made of tough oak.

During my boyhood days a lot of people used to come to the country from our farm to reach the lake, and enjoy a swim on Saturday nights. Sometimes there would be fifty or sixty present. But change gradually came about, and the young people of the village went to the beach on the lake.

I think that a boy or girl who has not gone barefooted as a child has missed something. There is the feel of freedom, and of coolness, and of dirt and rough roads. The result was well shaped feet and tough ones. Those old times are past and gone, however much we may regret them.

It would be a very humdrum life if there were no changes, and these changes are generally for the better. But all enduring change must come from individual life before it comes to the Nation.

Stinking smut, or bunt of wheat is a very common disease of this crop and one runs across many samples of it in threshing during the fall. The latest is a new variety of bunt known as qwart bunt which unfortunately does not seem to be controlled by means of any of the known treatments. The spores can be distinguished from the older and more common variety only by means of a microscope. Some new types have now been found in two separate fields in Ontario, and Haldimand farmers who have run across suspicious fields could submit a sample of their wheat to the Department of Agriculture at Cayuga. In the case of the early indication as yet known is that the panicle are apt to be shorter and tillering or stooling is increased.

Last year the Winter Fair Association was to fill applications for tickets for the Horse Show placed through the local Agricultural Representative and when the reached the winter fair office by a given date. This offer is being repeated and Haldimand farmers and their families who are intending to take in the fair have many days yet to make reservations through the local office of the Department of Agriculture at Cayuga. All such applications must be in the Cayuga office by noon on Saturday, October 11th in order to be assured. Have you limed that field yet? Just remember this is a good time of year to put lime on the land. The lime are dry and easy to work and there are more days now than during the busy days of the spring. Lime spread now has plenty of time to mix with the soil particles and control the acid condition of the soil before the young legume seedlings start to grow next spring. It is still recommended that the heavier the lime can be kept to the surface of the soil the better since that is where it will do the most good for the tiny legume seedlings. Remember too, there is a subsidy on the transportation of lime. This amounts to three cents per ton mile. Complete information can be had on application to your agricultural representative.

On The Farm Front

BRIEF NOTES FOR THE BUSY FARMER

— By Haldimand Harry —

Many Haldimand farmers have found grass silage to have been a life saver this year during the time when pastures have been so short and dry. Our guess is that a great deal more grass silage will be made in the years to come. Of course, there is good grass silage and there is poor grass silage depending on how it is handled, the maturity of the grass and clover that is put in and the ability of the operator to keep the air out of the silo. As has been pointed out in this column before, grass silage requires a great deal more care in making than does corn silage but once we have learned the technique we have a product that is a highly satisfactory feed.

-oOo-

At the same time we should not altogether pass up the possibility of using corn to good advantage in making a high quality feed for winter feeding. Corn has been an old standby for years and it is still hard to beat. Because of the ease with which it can be ensiled there has been a tendency to become a bit careless in the handling of this crop. Not enough attention has been paid to the cutting of the crop at the right maturity — just as the kernels begin to dent — nor have we always seen to it that the silo was just as tight as it should be. In a dry season such as we have this year it would be a good plan to cut down a little earlier in order to have enough moisture.

-oOo-

Where the corn is a little too dry it may even be necessary to add water and the silage itself would be better to be cut very short — probably not longer than three eighths of an inch. Where the newer forage harvesters are being used it will be quite in the ads immediately but where a corn binder is used plan not to leave it in the field any longer than is absolutely necessary. Leaves the ears on the corn. If you are putting up silage at the proper stage of maturity there will be too early to take any cobs off.
