What Is Drouth?

Drouth means that when you drive across a meadow, the grass crackles like dry paper under your wheels; and that next day it is dead where the tires of car or tractor have passed. It means that the corn, planted on your richest ground and with all the care and expense for manure and fertilizer to insure the highest yield, gets up to tasseling stage. Then the dark green leaves start to twist as each day's relentless sun beats down and the forming ears are dwarfed to nubbins with little feeding value. It means that expensive seedings of a new pasture which you are counting on for next year, after the drouth may have passed, shrivel and die in the dusty fields. Drouth means that the springs dry up and the creeks gradually disappear and the ponds grow thick with green scum as the last water soaks into the thirsty soil, so that you start hauling water or driving the animals to some distant

Have More Twins Left-handed people and people who stutter are more likely to be the parents of twins than right-handed people and people who do not stutter. This has been discovered by Dr. Glen Holland, of the Los Angeles branch of the University of California. For years he has been studying the biology of twins. He has found that racial stock and the age of mothers are factors in the production of twins.

Older mothers are much more likely to have twins. Negroes and people of the Scandinavian countries, he points out, invariably have a larger number of twins than do Japanese and Mediterranean peoples. Dr. Holland is now engaged on research concerning identical twins, the origin of which has intrigued scientists all over the world. He is investigating, too, the question of why twins vary. For instance, often one is right-handed and the other left-handed. And he may find out why twins almost invariably run in families. Other scientists have revealed that in Germany, France and Italy twins are most common in areas where the majority of people have blue or grey eyes.

But the scientists cannot say why. Perhaps Dr. Holland will solve this mystery during his present researches.
