We generally get into quite a mess with the mailing of our Christmas cards each year, but this year we made a worse mess of it than usual. It makes us wonder if other people have the same difficulty. Receiving a Christmas card is a heart warming experience and, in fact, sending them is indeed pleasant. However, it can become a frustrating experience if it is not done properly.

The first thing to do is make a master list on all the people you would like to send a card to. Once this has been done place a tick beside each name as the envelope is addressed. In that way you can see at a glance who you have sent cards to. Retain the list for reference purposes the following year as the addresses will often come in quite handy.

We wish something would happen to make us follow the advice given above. Our method is faster but we usually end up sending two or three cards to some friends and completely overlooking others. This year we addressed about fifty cards to "Retain the list for reference purposes the following year as the addresses will often come in quite handy."

Being careless about such things as sending out Christmas cards can defeat the whole purpose of the thing. Not only that it leaves your wife in a dull mood just at the time of the year when complete happiness should prevail on the domestic scene. At any rate we have her assurance that from now on the matter of sending out Christmas cards will remain firm in her capable hands.

We note some of the newspapers are hinting that the members of the Legislature for Haldimand-Norfolk will soon be appointed Minister of Welfare in the Frost Government. As we have said on previous occasions a prime Minister will be making no mistake in placing Cabinet responsibility on the shoulders of the member for Haldimand-Norfolk.

The suggestion that citizens join in putting up coloured lights for the Christmas Season has brought a when an opportunity afforded itself very good response. It adds tremendously to the general appearance of things. Mr. and Mrs. Guy Lewis deserve special mention for the attractive entrance to their home.
