Painting, music and theatrical art, particularly the first two, would seem to be a far cry from the rengh-and-tumble hurly-burly of hockey. And in a sense, the gulf between them is as wide as the Grand Canyon. Yet, all four are, in a sense, tied up in a package.

Mostly, when sports scribes take their typewriters in hand to eal with the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, they dig the separation of the book of synonyms to find a variety of terms that ill embrace acid criticism, and biting sarcasm, directed at the A.H.A. and its methods. Stratgely, it's seldom that any good ord is spoken for the body, possibly because the "A" in the title anding for Amateur has become something of a byword, the mateurs remaining in hockey, beyond school age, being as rare the dodo bird.

But the C.A.H.A. is quietly doing a first-rate job for struggling young Canadians in a field quite apart from hockey. This is in the form of C.A.H.A. scho arships, promoted by the Canada Foundation, and awarded annually since 1949 to provide advanced study abroad for young Canadian painters, composers and theatre students. Competition for the awards is on a national basis, and this year seventy-five applications were received from students in eight of the provinces. Since the beginning of the awards thirteen scholars have been aided in their studies in England, Scotland, France, Italy and the United States.
