As is the case with all hybrids, animal or vegetable, there is a great increase in vigour when the cross-breeding is successful.

Cross-bred pines five and six years old are already twice as large as the average "pedigree' pines of the same age.

But fast growth is only one of the advantages of cross-breed-ing. For some purposes wood that sidebranches, must be discouraged.

By careful breeding, pines can be produced almost devoid of branches. There are age-old enemies of the forest, such as drought, rust and weevil, which are being fought by the new trees.

Thus a species has been dethe Sportsmen's Show, March 18, veloped to combine the fast growth of one tree with the drought-resistant qualities of another, while others are being produced for their qualities of resistance to the weevil and rust. In Britain's Forestry Research Stations emphasis is on the fast-growing Corsican pine, beech, European larch, Scots pine, and Sitka spruce—rather than our native hardwoods.

Other countries, too, are spe cialising in the kinds of wood they most need. Swedish scientists are working on aspen for paper pulp. Denmark is concenpaper pulp. Denmark is concentrating on producing dwarf fruit trees for indoor growth.

Australia and New Zealand are especially interested in importing foreign trees and acclimatising them. Canada, a great pulp-producer, is working on fast-growing poplars.

Eventually, with the help of these hybrids, the world may produce two or three times its present volume of timber.
