ANNE HIRST Your Family Counselor

"Dear Anne Hirst: What do you do when your mother-in-law tries to run the whole family? She is sweet to us in many ways, but allows us no privacy. She loves her grandchildren, but she imposes her own way despite their ordered routine."

"She wakes my baby out of a sound sleep to rock him. She tells me what to feed him, though she knows I follow our doctor's prescribed diet; she even disagrees with me as to his clothing."

"She complained to my husband that I was stung with the baby, so I let her have him for a day. She fed him indigestible food, and he was sick for four days. This didn't seem to annoy my husband; he almost always sides with her."

RUINS FAMILY LIFE

"No matter what we have planned for a holiday together, she insists on gathering the whole family at her home. And if my husband and I have planned a quiet evening, she accuses me of trying to keep him from her."

"Yet if I am ill she drives me

What Women Do To Get A Man

When a pretty, nineteen-year-old girl arrived at a party in Wellington, New Zealand, recently, her face fell. "There aren't half enough men to go around," she pouted.

Then an idea struck her. Before her friends could stop her, she rushed to a telephone, rang up the local fire brigade and invited everyone along.

Polly, but firmly, the firemen refused to come. So ten minutes later the girl rang up the fire station again, this time calling them out on a fire alarm.

The sequel? The girl had to pay a fine of $15 and was ordered to pay the cost of the turn-out.

It's amazing what a woman will do to get a man!

One blonde, who loved a man who had been jailed for four years for stealing cheese, belonging to her, scraped together her hard-earned savings, took her to a solicitor and pleaded with him to get the man released somehow.

She put the solicitor in funds so that this application could be made for the man's release," explained his counsel. He added that the woman wanted to marry the man who had wronged her.

Even more determined to get her man was an eighteen-year-old, red-eyed Italian girl, whose lover had walked out on her, slamming the door.

As he reached the street, he heard a shout and saw the head of the form of the girl he had just left from the second-floor window.

He rushed forward and just managed to catch her in his arms as she fell. He held her, and later that night kissed and made it up. "I've won back my man," she bragged. "I've won back my man," she bragged. "I've won back my man," she bragged.

At a party, she met a man who was interested in her. She must make a stand. If this problem is worrying you, tell Anne Hirst, 123 Eighteenth St., New Toronto, Ont.

PIE-EYED PIGEON

Brewer's drymen unloading some barrels of beer from their van into the cellar of a Warehouse had the misfortune to knock out a bung and quite a quantity of the beer flowed into the gutter before it could be up-ended. Later an inquisitive pigeon sampled the frothing overflow and apparently found it to its liking. "It was seen staggering around in pigeon-toed circles and giving off feathered sighs!"

But the woman made the stipulation that if ever she felt disposed to forgive, she would make a sign on the anniversary of their wedding by toiling the bell once. For several years she had gone on their anniversary and told the bell that her man had not come till now. He had long before moved away from the district, leaving no address, but some strange, impelling instinct had made him journey many miles in case the bell tolled that night.

The couple, still only middle-aged, left for a second honeymoon.

When she saw her handsome young husband standing in the dock, facing imprisonment as a result of per prosecution, a Lancashire wife who had found passionate letters from two other

Giving Father Time A Shock

A few weeks ago, her Majesty's Telegraph Ship Monarch set out from London, loaded with 1,450 miles of submarine cable. This will be joined to the 800 miles laid last summer and will complete the renewal of the cable, maintained by Cable and Wireless Ltd., between Portlarn, near Land's End, and Newfoundland.

The old cable was laid in 1874 and went out of use in 1943. It is estimated that the renewal operation will cost $8,000,000, and that it will enable cable traffic on this route to be increased by 70 per cent.

The 8,050-ton "Monarch" is the largest and most up-to-date cable ship in the world. She can carry up to 2,500 nautical miles of cable in her four cylindrical tanks, which have a total capacity of 125,000 cubic feet.

Cable ships must remain at sea for long periods and hence carry enormous amounts of fuel, stores and water. Five thousand tons of cable, 2,000 tons of fuel, and 1,000 tons of water may easily be disposed of "on voyage," so that special arrangements are made to maintain the stability of the unloaded ships.

Most cable ships are small, about 1,500 tons. They are ready to manoeuvre in restricted waters and can steam as little as one knot when required. Much of their time is spent in repairing damaged cables.

The ship is commanded by a naval officer, and the crew consists of about 100 men. The ship is also equipped with a hospital, a cinema, and a library.

THE Calvert SPORTS COLUMN by Elmer Ferguson

Where would Canadian football be today, if the forward pass hadn't been adopted in the face of very considerable opposition from die-hards, in 1917? We guess it would still be a minor game, with few if any imported stars, small crowds, moderate enthusiasm. Certainly the credit for developing the forward pass goes to the late, lamented, Elmer Ferguson.

But that isn't the way we hear the story. Into the legend of the Forward Pass comes another, and less familiar name, that of Edward B. Cochems, former coach of the St. Louis University football team of 1906-7. He is regarded by all times as the No. 1 pioneer in the field of forward passing.

Cochems, a graduate of Wisconsin University and a member of one of its greatest teams around the turn of the century, was a player and a coach. He was a coach of the St. Louis University football team of 1906-7. He is regarded by all times as the No. 1 pioneer in the field of forward passing.

„Plain Horse Sense.“

by BOB ELLIS

There is hope that the news of the decision of the American government to sell farm surplus to Britain in a "counter-part" fund for its purchases in Britain or for materials purchased under the Colombo plan for economic development of Southeast Asia.

Martin Levinson of the CCL Department of International Affairs said that by this method of trading Canadian farmers could get rid of their surplus.

Natural Markets

The Senate Committee pool-pooled these suggestions and considered them unrealistic and unfeasible. Shortly after the Minister of Trade, Mr. Howe, came out with the opinion that our natural markets were South of the 49th parallel.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture, leaning heavily not only on the Canadian but also on the U.S. government, in its brief to the same Senate Committee, submitted at the same time a copy of CCL, had the governments of non-dollar countries should improve their competitive position in dollar area markets with sound fiscal and monetary policies. They should also earn more dollars by expanding their export markets in North America.

The CFA also counseled the U.S. government as to the steps it should take to enable the non-dollar countries to earn more dollars they could use for purchases of Canadian farm surplus.

CFA Well Satisfied

While Mr. Gardiner was "not getting worried about pressure the London sportsmen were very high on Iron Hogue and, a few hours before the bout, Langford heard that there was plenty of even money to be had. "Go and bet our end of the purse," said Sam. "That's too good a chance to be missed."

Woodman promptly hid him to the spot where all the sports gathered — Crockett's probability — slugged down his possible identification papers and loudly announced "I want to bet ten thousand on Langford!"

The bet was covered promptly and, with the slip in which the water was recorded in his pocket, Woodman went back to rejoin his fighter. However, seeing his fighter, he lost his way and only got to Sam when the latter was just about to enter the ring. "The dough is down," said Woodford gleefully, "ten thousand on even money."

Sam peeked at the slip and almost dropped. "Look what you did! he yelled. 'You've gone and bet fifty thousand, and if I bet fifty thousand, I'm just probably hang in because we just ain't got that sort of money.' "Fifty thousand — you're nuts," replied Woodford. "I only bet ten thousand."

"See for yourself," said Sam. "Ten thousand POUNDS — and they say those English fella are tough to break out of. Ten thou-
