women. It is a habit as old | around here when it gets really cold. Even at that we can't com-plain. The house last week was warm, the lane didn't fill in and there was just enough snow to cover the ground nicely. Of course the car wouldn't-start but that didn't matter because we don't like driving in cold weather anyway. Wednesday night Partner had a meeting to go to and called a taxi. Thursday was our W.I. meeting and I got a ride our W.I. meeting and I got a ride to it in a truck so we made out very well. By Friday the intense cold had lessened considerably; the car was in a cooperative mood; thus I was able to get downtown so now we have downtown, so now we hav enough supplies for yet another week. And, as always happen during stormy weather, I got in quite a lot of sewing, reading and writing. But I was certainly glad nothing prevented me from go-ing to our W.I. meeting. The roll-call was fun—"A superstitious belief in mother's or grandmother's day". The answers given made one realize we have come long way since those days. Here are just a few of them, "Never turn the bed on a Friday". Incidentally whatever took the place of a mattress was called "a bed", whether it was a feather bed or a straw tick. "Never start a job on a Saturday". "Break a mirror and you'll have bad luck for seven years". "Never walk under a ladder". "It is bad luck to sit 13 at a table".

As I look back to my childhood I have an unhappy conviction that I must have been a very perverse and appearance. tion that I must have been a very perverse and annoying little brat because I remember so well purposely defying all the rules in the book thereby upseting all my mother's superstitious beliefs. I would open an umbrella in the house, bring in hawthorn blossom, spill salt and

THE CANADA STARCH COMPANY

Grandy by

THE Calvert SPORTS COLUMN by Elmer Ferguson

This is a week which should furnish memories, good and bad, but certainly vivid, for the greatest heavyweight war-rior of modern times, the Manassa Mauler, Jack Dempsey.

On February 13, 1917, Jack Dempsey suffered the only knockout defeat of his career, when Fireman Jim Flynn, a rough, tough character out of Pueblo, Colorado, flattened him with one devastating punch. But on February 14, 1918, a Dempsey who had found himself and was whirling upward took ample revenge. He dropped his erstwhile conqueror, also with a single punch, in a match that was scheduled for 10 rounds, but went only a small fraction of one.

of one.

"I wasn't much more than a middleweight the first time
I boxed Fireman Flynn," Dempsey told me years later. "I was 22 years old. (Dempsey was born June 24, 1895), I didn't know much about boxing, really, I started fighting in 1915, won some fights under the name of Kid Blackie, some more under my own name. But I was just a journeyman fighter, not too much interested in the trade. And when I was knocked out by Flynn, a powerful fellow and a cagey fighter who knew much too much for me, I was just on the verge of quitting the ring zame entirely.

knew much too much for me, I was just on the verge of quetting the ring game entirely.

"Then Jack Kearns came along. Under Kearns I learned how to fight, how to box a little; how to use a left hand. Then I began to really fight. I found a style, a bob-and-weave type of fighting that was something different. I scored a lot of knockouts, lost a decision to Willie Meehan, but I was on my way, taking on bigger and better foes."

The fact is that the miraculous Dempsey fought for four years before he finally began to look like somebody of importance. In his early days he had some terrific fights with specimens like the burly Negro John Lester Johnson, Battling Jim Anderson, Andre Anderson, Wild Bert Kenney, Andy Malloy and many other tough foes. Some of his battles lasted 20 rounds.

Malloy and many other tough foes. Some of his dathes lasted 20 rounds.

His later battles are still remembered as epics, the mad assault on the giant Jess Willard, the furious melee with Luis Angel Firpo, the Wild Bull of the Pampas, and those two fights with Gene Tunney in which Dempsey made more friends in defeat than he ever had in victory.

That's the fantastic Dempsey story, one of the great legends of sport in our times, a legend we recall, because this is the anniversary of the week when he was on the verge of giving up the game in which he became an unforgettable figure.

Taking off from Dorval, the airport of Montreal, at 10 p.m., we saw the lights on the ground get farther and farther apart, the closer we got to Gander, so sparsely settled is the country in Newfoundland.

At 17,000 feet over the ocean the flight was much quieter than any other way of travelling could be. Only over the Irish Sea it got a bit bumpy; what else would you expect?

Before landing at Croydon we were told to put on our heavy coats as it was cold in England, it had "only" 57 degrees above zero. It sure was windy and the continuation of the trip to Paris "rather turbulent."

The first thing that strikes the foreign traveller in France is the friendliness and politeness of the people. Their eagerness to help and not to let you down, makes them give directions at times without being too sure themselves, which took us a swe shall have more to report
