

Handy, thrifty, delicious! "SALADA" TEA BAGS

ANNE HRST Your Family Counselor

"Dear Anne Hrst: I certainly agree with your advice to 'Be-wildered Wife' about her mother-in-law. My husband's mother is almost an exact duplicate. Before marriage she accepted me, but on our very wedding day she changed to a vicious animal. She sowed seeds of hate immediately and successfully."

"She also is neurotic, and carries on until she gets her way. My husband admits she is wrong, but he never took my side, and excused everything with 'She's my mother.'"

"I had put my heart and soul into my marriage. I worked and prayed hard for it to be a success, but to no avail. She created such ill will that I lost all respect for her and also for my husband. I saw him as he was, a spineless jellyfish who kept up at each other's throats when I was pregnant, and she, too, told me her son was too good for me. Her attacks gnawed. They left me a broken person, without faith in God or humanity."

"Finally I realized it was fruitless, and since I no longer hear her ugly lies and unkind words, I am growing normal again."

"Soon we will have been married five years. The nightmare is slowly fading. My faith has been restored, and since I no longer hear her ugly lies and unkind words, I am growing normal again."

"My husband continues to pay his respects to her, but our boy does not know his grandmother. I have borrowed her phrase, 'My son is too good for you.' I never dreamed it would end this way, but she brought it on herself. I am made of flesh, too, and there is a limit to my endurance. She is lucky she was not sued for alienation of affections."

"God bless your good work, Anne Hrst, and your patience and understanding of human spirits."

CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM Quadrantine D. Clarke

A new addition has been added to our family. We have named her "Annie" because she was born on the eve of our wedding anniversary. Her mother's name is May and she is a direct descendant of Daisy Durham, who was one of the first men to join our family. She was born in Ontario just over 30 long years ago. The name of Annie's father is "Lord Nelson" and he lives at Maple, Ontario. Annie has a nice, fluffy white fur coat with a few red-brown patches here and there, and she is really very active considering she is only two days old. Actually Annie wasn't too anxious to enter this cold, snowy world and managed to postpone her arrival for two whole days. After that the forces of nature were too strong for her and she finally made her appearance. A little more quietness in our lives, quietness that isn't forgotten by her mother, day after day. Besides, their upkeep was cheaper than that of a wife and when a pig grew fat you could sell it.

Unless you know where he hails from, you'll never guess why Dan Covington is still without a wife. It's because he doesn't think polygamy is practical nowadays. Last July it was said that Dan was the only bachelor in Short Creek, Arizona, the Mormon settlement which was raided and broken up by the police. Thirty-six men there possessed eighty-six wives.

How Can I?

Q. How can I clean suede shoes without injuring the suede?
A. An ordinary rubber sponge, such as can be bought at any ten-cent store, the tight sort that has a good resilient, is excellent for keeping the suede shoes clean. It will remove all the dust and soil without harming the fabric, as so many of the very stiff brushes are inclined to do.

Q. How can I prepare some way of dessert?
A. Try a combination of chocolate ice cream and orange sherbet. It makes a very colorful dessert, and a delicious one.

Q. How can I make an attractive garnish with cranberry jelly?
A. Slice the cranberry jelly and cut into fancy shapes with a cookie cutter or a knife, and you will have an elegant and attractive garnish for salads and desserts.

Q. How can I relieve a headache?
A. A home remedy that often brings relief is to place a pinch of salt on the tongue and allow it to dissolve. In about ten minutes take a drink of cold water.

Q. How can I prevent cracks in the enamel of a stove?
A. Never try to wipe off the half-a-mile for our mail. That would be just too much. There was a time when we would have been sued by the manufacturer when we used to get our mail once a week, and then only if we drove nine miles across the open prairie to get it. We didn't think of any great hardship. That, and a good

Her Knees Creak, So She Stays Single

You must possess many friends who, although in their late twenties, thirties or even forties, haven't married. Do you take a trip abroad this summer. A little town in southern Holland has thought up a wonderful scheme. Last year the town staged a Lonely Hearts Congress, attended by 800 bachelors and spinners from five continents.

Some of the guests announced quite frankly that they hoped to find someone to their taste. A Belgian labourer said he'd saved $450 as a preparation for marriage, but he didn't want to marry anyone in show business.

If so, you might be doing them an injustice. Some folk remain single because their standards are high. What about Yvonne de Carlo? No one could be more glamorous, so why is she still a bachelor girl? Because her ideal man must have the voice of Laurence Olivier, the looks of Robert Taylor, the humour of Aly Khan and the physique of Rocky Hudson!

Another attractive unmarried actress, Dora Bryan, who joined the "Much Binding" programme with Richard Murdoch and Kenneth Horne, and is now in the revue "At The Lyric," declared, "I'm too busy, and I don't want to marry anyone in show business." And then Dora changed her mind — for it was recently announced that she is to marry her boyhood friend Bill Lawton, the Lancashire League professional cricketer.

Gloria Rand, who starred in the ice show "Chu Chin Chow" at the Empire Pool, Wembley, holds a somewhat similar point of view. She likes skating too much and feels it impossible to pursue a career and run a home at the same time.

Then there's Sophie, said to be the only woman dress designer in Egypt. She has just held her first showing of clothes made from Egyptian textiles. Twenty-seven years old and very pleasing in appearance, she says her career means that she will probably never marry.

"An Egyptian husband," she sighs, "would never allow me to continue with it. It would be considered unsuitable."

When it comes to people whose names don't fit the headlines, their reasons for remaining unmarried are often the last word.

SLIMMING DOWN

"Reduce while you work" is the idea behind the plastic "slimming suit" demonstrated below by Adrienne Germaine, in London, England. Doing household chores in the air-tight garment induces heavy perspiration, which is supposed to take off the pounds.

many other things—cold, shortage of fuel, and only the bare necessities of life. I remember that sometimes I used to wear mitts in the house to keep my hands warm. If we had to live under the same conditions today we could not do it. To those days belonged hard work, many privations, but a greater peace of mind. We had no car, no radio, very few neighbours, our only means of communication was the telephone and our only news-papers the good old Family Herald and Weekly Star. Distances in other parts of the world did not affect us at all—sometimes we didn't even hear of them until they had ceased to be news. Our worries were purely local — the weather, the price of wheat and oats, harvesting our crops and the health of our families. Today we have the same worries, plus the pressure of modern living. News comes to us hot off the wires. To keep pace with it we need a brain as agile as a cricket bat. We are too busy to think of anything but the news. We are too busy to think of anything but the news. We are too busy to think of anything but the news.

Lightning, that vagrant and unpredictable thing which appeared, by theory, to strike twice in the same place, may fool the hockey folk this year.

At the end of the 1938-39 hockey season, Montreal Canadiens finished sixth in a 7-club league. They managed to scrape into the play-offs, but were quickly ousted. It was a bad year for the French-Canadian team, except in one instance: the League's leading point-man, with 24 goals and 23 assists, was Hector "Toe" Blake, battling left wing. And for his services in out-punching such greats as Apps, Schmidt, Cowley, Bauer, Schrier, Dillon and Drillon, he won the Hart Trophy, as the player most useful to his team.

As these lines are being penned, there seems to be developing a feeling, perhaps sentimental, that once again a member of the League's lowliest club should be very carefully considered for the coveted award this season. For it is believed that Elvin Ira (Al) Rollins of Vancouver, Sask., the "Thin Man" who heads the Chicago Black Hawks nets, has an excellent chance of winning the award.

Last season, Rollins was second only to Detroit's Gordie Howe in the voting for the "most valuable player to his team." And if any player has filled that description this season the player is Rollins.

The Hawks have never been known as a defensive-minded team in the postwar years, and last season they were not. They have been too much to handle for several outstanding goalies, like Boston's Sugar Jim Henry, Harry Lumley, now with Toronto, and ex-Brainerd Frank (Mr. Zero) Brimacombe.

And when you discount the 24 goals scored against Chicago in four games Rollins missed earlier this season, you get a true picture of his value. In other words, Rollins is a real rookie award winner Jack Gelineau, tried to stem the tide, but in vain.

Tall, slim, poker-faced, Rollins is lightning-fast with hands, feet and stick, has perfect reflexes, a keen eye. It was the goading wizardry of Rollins that carried Hawks last spring, to their first play-off berth in six years, and forced Canadiens' ultimate Cup winners, into seven games in the semi-finals.

The Hart Trophy award was made before this series, and Rollins might otherwise have won it. But he didn't strike twice, and a member of another lowly team may edge more prominent stars out of the "most valuable" award.

PLAIN HORSE SENSE

Rome, Italy
Here in Rome the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO) has its headquarters. In one of the ultra-modern buildings that Mussolini put up for one of his government departments, a thousand people of a dozen different nationalities collect and co-ordinate all information on production and distribution of food products in all continents.

In Italian expansion of agricultural production has not kept pace with the increase in population. Most progress has been achieved in special products such as fruit, vegetables, wine and industrial crops, most of which are largely grown for export. A decline in the cereal area has not been compensated by higher yields, and coarse grain production in particular is considerably less than before the war. Live-stock production as a whole is not yet at the pre-war level, but is approaching it for milk and eggs. A somewhat larger production of rice and sugar has been a feature of Italian agriculture in recent years.

How far Italian production is lagging behind can best be judged by comparing the average yield per hectare of the years 1945-52 with the average of the period 1934-38. While Western Europe has increased its production by 15 per cent, Mediterranean production is down six per cent. In rice and maize—in spite of the first-mentioned larger production—they produced in 1945-52 only 83 per cent of the average of 1934-38. Maize and rice are the most important staple foods of Italy.

Italian Politics
The low productivity and the concentration of land ownership in large holdings on which the peasants work either as share croppers or for very low wages, are the main stumbling block for the formation of a new government. The situation is clearly recognized by all parties.

The parties on the extreme right want to maintain the status quo, those on the extreme left — Communists and Nenni Socialists — are aiming at totalitarianism and within the Christian-Democrats, party of the Centre, opinions are divided.

Sigfrido Panfili, leader of the social minded faction of the Christian-Democrats, wanted to go it alone and has announced the three small parties of the old De Gasperi coalition, the Liberals, Republicans and Democratic Socialists.

There is still hope that the old coalition can be rebuilt.

Deblurring TV

We used to dream about it and eventually it came true—the little device by which one is enabled to sit snugly in one's armchair and switch off the sales talk from a TV commercial. The makers of Blab-Off, the device in question, report high and mounting sales for their handy, humanitarian little gadget.

Here is evidence of what Ortega y Gasset might call a "revolt of the masses" against the commercial drive to which their TV sets mercilessly expose them. However, the announced aim of Blab-Off is not to kill commercials but to improve them.

Advertisers who give new facts, new ways to use imported goods, new items to enrich the lives of their hearers — these sponsors won't get blabbed off. But the unctuous and interminable appeals to vanity and fear and false appetites—these can be reduced to silent mouthings on the screen, to be ignored at will.

Now the advertisers are advertising Blab-Off, and the cycle is complete. Perhaps it proves that a free society carries within itself the remedy for its own ills—excesses—From The Christian Science Monitor.

by ASHER CRITCH

A week or so ago, in poverty and almost forgotten, there passed away one of the greatest leather slingers, for his pounage, that ever crawled between the ropes of a ring. He was Battling Nelson, and if memory serves us aright, the Battling was not a nickname. We may be wrong, but as we recall it, the Durable Dane was christened over in Denmark — Once Matthew Battling Nelson. Of course, as we said, we might be mistaken — and if anybody wants to slip us return fare to Copenhagen, first-class, we'd be glad to slip over and look it up.

But there's no mistake about Nelson's battling ability. He was about as tough as they come, and the following tale — borrowed largely from Bill Stern's "FAVORITE BOXING STORIES" — is a must for every fight-fan's library — tells of the deadly feud between Nelson and the great rivals, Jimmy Britt.

The fighters were as unlike as they could be. Britt was young, handsome, intelligent, a smooth dandy who not only acted like a perfect gentleman but looked the part in his Prince Albert coat and high hat. On the other hand, Battling Nelson, the Durable Dane, was a hardboiled, tough little man with a weakened face and a tangled mass of curly hair that defied the discipline of a comb and brush. Nelson's idea of fashion consisted of turtle-neck sweaters and a cap.

One day, Battling Nelson, attracted by his tattered ensemble of sweater and cap caught a glimpse of Jimmy Britt in his smart Prince Albert coat. During the fight, Nelson's opponent realized that he was fighting a prize fighter wearing a hat like that positively infuriated the little tough guy. He determined on the spot to destroy Jimmy Britt together with his fancy clothes, slick manners, and, above all, his high hat.

It was inevitable that these two fighters meet in the ring. They came to face each other in a crowded arena under the hot blue sun of a California sky. As Nelson glared across the ring at slim Jimmy Britt, he could still see the high hat in his mind's eye.

When they met in the middle of the ring, Jimmy Britt looked into Battling Nelson's face and what he saw there sent a cold chill down his back. Nelson's eyes were those of a dead man, expressionless, terrifying. Jimmy Britt shook off the feeling of horror and fear, but he was afraid of any man in the ring, and he would not let himself be frightened now.

As the bout began, Britt drew murmurs of appreciation from the crowd for his superb boxing. He landed six times as often as the grim little Nelson, and his blows were hard and crisp. The Durable Dane shook them off and kept ploughing in.

At the start of the eighteenth round, Battling Nelson tore into Jimmy Britt, showing him with club-like rights and lefts. The handsome, superb boxer master, Jimmy Britt, went down. A harsh fall over the arena. The idol of the crowd had crumbled before the fists of the scruffy little guy from the Middle West.

Britt's eyes were glazed as he rolled over and tried to pick himself up from the canvas. Nelson, a mass of bruises and beaten to a pulp himself, leaned over the fallen warrior, snarling with hate.

Britt tried desperately to pull himself to his feet to go on with the battle. As Nelson growled with animal satisfaction, Britt's head sank once more to the canvas and the referee counted him out.

Then came the roar of the crowd for the conqueror. Battling Nelson was hailed as a king, swept up on the shoulders of his new admirers and carried triumphantly from the ring.

From this height, Nelson looked down on Jimmy Britt as the latter was being helped to his corner. "Let him wear his high hat now," snarled the new favorite. "He'll never be the champion!"

Battling Nelson was right. Britt never did become champion. Battling Nelson did, thanks to a feud that started because he could not bear to see another fighter wear a high hat.
