Natural Prices For Natural Solution For Farm Problem

(The Rural Scene) There is such a thing as natural prices for farm products. These are maintained by the same forces that maintain the price of wheat. Natural prices are those that are free to rise and fall, always tend to keep the supply of goods equal to the demand. When goods become scarce the price rises and the higher prices induce more goods into the market. When more goods are offered for sale than the people want, prices drop and the lower prices encourage more production.
