high school two years ago our daughter, 20, met a young man 10 years older whom she has not been able to shake off. She is training to be a nurse, and we are much distressed about his effect on her. He is a D.P. has no education, and speaks broken English. She promised a year ago to give him up, but last week she came home terribly upset. When she tries to end the friendship he goes to pieces,

CHRONICLES GINGER FARM

Poor old Tippy finally died. He departed this life last Monday and the farm seems lonesome without him. According to our "vet" a virus infection had penetrated the liver and spleen and was the main reason why Tip refused to eat. When I told the vet Tip was eleven years old he exclaimed, "Well, after all, what could you expect?" And now for some good news.

Last Thursday I heard geese overhead. At least I thought I did. but I wasn't sure as I couldn't see them. But the next day a neighbour told me he heard geese, too. So I guess I was right, even though it does seem early. Early geese, early spring—isn't that the old saying? And who will grumble if if proves to be true? Just for the record, the date on which I heard the geese was March 10. I haven't seen or heard a robin yet, but there was a blue jay out for an airing this morning and there are certainly plenty of crows and starlings around and the cows are sort of sniffing the air when they are turned out to drink-the way they do when spring is in the air. The willows are getting a yellowy look and the creek is running fast, washing away a corner of our front field down by the road, due to a faulty engineering job at the time the highway was built. As if there wasn't enough soil erosion in the country al-Farm auction sales are com-ing along thick and fast these days. In the last three to be posted the present owners are retiring and younger men have purchased the farms. Which is purchased the farms. Which is all to the good. We hope the trend continues. You know, farm folk have a lot of adjusting nowadays—and it isn't always easy. As everyone knows Saturday used to be the shopping day for farmers and their families. As recently as ten years ago almost every small town was crowded on Saturdays with country folk intent on weekend shopping, and of course visiting among themselves especially on Saturday nights.

The families of business people were seldom seen in any great number down town on a Saturday. There was a sort of unwritten law that left that day to the farmers. It made it easier for shoppers and shopkeepers

• All honour to the Penticton V's. In the face of trying circumstances, they recovered the distinction rightly Canada's, the hockey championship of the world, thus throwing sand into the gear-boxes of a propaganda machine that must have been hopefully poised to grind out praise for the athletic superiority of the sturdy sons of the Soviet. And now that we have won back what was really ours, triumph in our own national game, should we call it a day? Should we refrain from further participation in this annual orgy of insults, mis-statements and accusations which are inevitable when one of the participants is seeking to use a sport for national propaganda purposes? There is the thought that Canada should continue to participate, first, in the interest of friendly relations with countries outside the iron curtain; second, for the international good of hockey, to help spread the gospel of our crackling winter

THE Calvert SPORTS COLUMN

by Elmer Ferguson

But as to the event known as the world championships, we believe it is mis-named. Everybody knows that no real world championship, meaning world superiority in hockey, is seriously involved unless the champions of the National Hockey League, or the Stanley Cup holders. are involved.

Of course, there can be produced that over-ripe red herring to indicate that this is the "world amateur championship". But that isn't going to deceive anybody because everyone knows that in hockey at that level, simon-pure amateurism is as scarce as the dodo-bird. And everyone knows, too, that Russia's athletes are part of the propaganda machine, stallfed, government-sponsored, government-controlled, their activities suitably recompensed. Russia has its own brand of amateurism, something contrived to suit the circumstances.

And now that the fight has been won, and Canada's hockey superiority re-established to the embarrassment of the Kremlin's propaganda machine, is there any virtue in carrying on with a pointless chore? Everybody in sport is fully aware that Canada is supreme in hockey.

Our victories in this tournament, over teams that in some es could hardly make a respectable showing in Canada's lget hockey leagues, prove nothing new. Or should we tinue so that hockey shall become a more universal winter

The Ontario Farmers Union deserve a hearty pat on the back for the clear and precise Brief presented by them to the Agricultural Committee of the Ontario Legislature.

Ontario Legislature.

After stating that "producer controlled orderly marketing is one of the main objectives of our organization," and that they are fully in support of the idea of the organization marketing the of co-operative marketing, the Union said that any criticism they had, was directed "only against some of the methods that have been used in the past and are proposed to be used in the future."

General Principle.

The Union wants to see control over the marketing of farm products in the hands of pro-ducers instead of vested in boards whose members are appointed by the governments. They proposed the abolishment of the government asked that "any marketing scheme submitted by a representative group of producers and adopted by a majority of the producers of the commodity to which the scheme applies, be established directly by the Leg-islature, to operate under the supervision of the Minister of

"marketing boards or agencies established under present legis-lation have been sadly lacking the power to market, in other words, the power to buy and sell' and that existing boards are only negotiating commit-tees. It was therefore proposed that the powers be extended to include the powers (a) to market, (b) to process the product,

(c) to fix prices. To prevent a possible abuse of such far reaching powers, the Union recommended that a number of members, not exceeding one fifth, of a marketing board be appointed by the Minister to represent consumer

To facilitate the establishment of more and larger processing and storage plants, to be owned and operated collec-tively by farmers, in the inter-est of orderly marketing, the Union requested the assistance of the Department of Agriculture in the form of advice and financial loans "on a considerably larger scale than in the past." On such a basis it could be envisaged that a number of co-op packing plants will be set up, strategically located, all

She summoned him for assault, declaring that he was a stranger and that she greatly resented being kissed by someone to whom she had not been introduced.

> His Number Was Two

Numerologists may attach whatever significance to this story as they please. It's about Ray Chapman, famous short-stop of the Cleveland Indians, whose greatest phobia was number—the number two.

Before batting, he would always swing two bats. At bat, he tapped twice on home plate. He never entered a place first, but always second. And he batted second in the Cleveland line-up. On Aug 16, 1929, Ray Chapman took part in the strangest game of his career. Twice, with the count at two and two, Ray hit two-baggers. Twice with the count at two and two, Ray was hit by a pitched ball. At the close of the day, his figures in the box score were: Times at bat, 2; runs scored, 2; hits, 2; stolen bases, 2. In the field it was: putouts, 2; assists, 2; errors the seventh inning, Chapman was hit by a pit second time, to make the cycle of twos complete. Ray Chapman dropped to the ground under the impact of the blow, and never got up again. Within a matter of hours the great shortstop was dead, never again to be obsessed by the number
