WHY DID CHURCHILL SAY IT? —

— By Lewis Milligan —

NO OTHER British statesman has served his country with greater self-sacrificing devotion and zeal than Sir Winston Churchill. At a moment of national peril, when all seemed to be lost, with the flower of the British army driven to the sea at Dunkirk, Churchill was called to leadership. With his indomitable spirit he roused the nation from the point of despair to resolute courage that snatched victory from defeat. With keen insight, foresight and unflagging determination he kept the people and the military forces at fighting-pitch for five years of terrible struggle for existence, and led them to victory. Even his political enemies recognized his greatness as a leader and they joined in the general tribute of gratitude accorded him at the end of the war.

Leaders of all parties, with one exception, Aneurin Bevan, joined the celebration of Sir Winston's Eightieth birthday. But there was a fly in the ointment. That saying is very apt in this connection. It is taken from the Book of Ecclesiastes and runs: "Dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savour: so doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wisdom and honour." The "little folly" in this case was Sir Winston's recollection of an incident that occurred when the Russian and British armies came face to face in Germany after the German surrender. A German general and a British officer were discussing the situation. The Russians had been digging in on their line, and the British officer questioned the necessity for that action. When Sir Winston heard of it he wired General Montgomery to stack the surrendered German arms as a precaution against further advancement into Western Europe.

The blunt disclosure of that incident caused a furore in the British press, and even the London Times felt impelled to ask: "What on earth made him say it?" Sir Winston later replied that he was merely emphasizing his long felt suspicion of the Russians, especially Stalin, whom he denounced as being "carried away by the triumphs of victory and acting as if he thought he could secure for Russia and Communism the domination of the world."

That was quite sufficient explanation and a reasonable excuse for the precaution taken at the time when it appeared that the triumphant Russian forces might overrun the whole of Europe. They had already dropped paratroops on Denmark. It is more than likely that Stalin had been informed by his spies of Sir Winston's action and accepted the news as a warning, "Thus far shalt thou come and no further." The very fact that the Russian troops were digging in a defensive line was in itself an intimation that they intended to stop any further advance of the British and Americans. So there appears to have been suspicion on both sides; but the Russians were the first to create suspicion. Before the Germans had surrendered the Russians were talking and acting as if they had won the war, and their cold war with the West had already begun.

Stalin showed his hand at Yalta, and it is my belief that, if Churchill could then have had his way, there would never have been the one-sided agreement that permitted encircling the western occupation troops in Berlin. President Roosevelt was at that time a very sick man, and, as always, was ready to put implicit faith in the word of Stalin. Churchill, on the other hand, had earlier lost what little faith he ever had in Stalin, who had started his cold war against his allies before the Yalta conference. Before he died Roosevelt probably realized that his faith had been misplaced and it doubtless hastened his death.

But why did Sir Winston say it? In my opinion he said it for the same reason that he spoke out and warned the pacifist British people against putting their trust in a mightily armed Nazi Germany.

TELEVISION, RADIO AND PUBLIC —

(The Ottawa Journal)

THE CANADIAN Broadcasting Corporation announces a surplus for the fiscal year 1953-54 of $6,577,862.

"Nice going" some will say. Yet before any of us start throwing hats in the air over such a seemingly fine achievement it might be well to take a look at how this "surplus" was secured.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's income for the fiscal year 1953-54—the year reported—consisted of the following:

1. A direct grant from Parliament of $6,250,000 (this an annual grant to take the place of dropped radio licence fees).
2. An excise tax on radio and television receiving sets and parts which amounted to $16,760,000.
3. Commercial broadcasting (advertising) revenues which amounted to $3,806,000.

Thus without the $6,250,000 grant from Parliament (which of course comes out of taxes) and without the excise taxes on radio and television sets the entire CBC operation would have shown a loss of at least $15,000,000. And the CBC it must be remembered is exempted from corporation income tax, does not have to pay 47 per cent. of its net earnings to the Government.

* * *

The excise tax on television sets which goes to the CBC is 15 percent., applied on the manufacturer's price to wholesalers. It varies therefore according to the mark-up between the wholesale and retail price, but it is estimated that between 7½ and 10 percent. of the retail price of a television set is represented by excise tax.

In other words on a television set of $300 as much as $30. is represented by this tax.

There are two objections to such a tax earmarked for the CBC. The first is that the tax is high. The second is that it is unsound to leave taxes on materials concerned with some particular national activity or enterprise earmarked to support such an industry. For example the public would object and rightly if the Government sought to eliminate the deficits of the Canadian National Railways by special excise taxes—earmarked for the National—on all passenger tickets purchased over that system, or on all freight or express sent over it, or sought to eliminate the deficit of the Post Office by still higher excise taxes on letters or other mail matter or on post office orders.

The principle or right theory of taxes is that they be paid into a consolidated fund.

* * *

A year or so after the CBC had been launched on radio broadcasting its then general manager, Mr. Gladstone Murray, said that the most it should or would take from advertising would amount to not more than $500,000 a year. Now the CBC with TV added to radio is taking in $3,866,000 a year in advertising, yet that sum is but a drop in the bucket towards meeting its expenditures which last year totalled $19,896,000.

And the CBC tells us that its operating costs "will inevitably rise steeply"!

Looking at that bleak prospect does not the question come as to whether Canada should not take another look, and perhaps a pretty sharp one, at its whole picture of radio and television broadcasting? Try to find out with a little more certainty than exists now just where this whole enterprise is going.

* * *

Some people ask the question: Why should it be the business of any government to provide people with radio and TV programs any more than it should be the business of the Government to provide them with moving picture programs?

That apart, a question which admits of perhaps too much over-simplification, should we not try to find out at least whether the CBC may not be less ambitious in its expansions and its programs—whether or not it is spending beyond our needs as well as beyond its income?

Specifically, do we really need to have "commentators" speaking to us every Sunday from London and Paris and Washington — and even Ottawa — either repeating to us what has already appeared in Saturday's newspapers or reasoning up with their personal opinions or ideas or prejudices? Do we really need to have the "Voice of Canada" broadcasting to 16 countries at heavy cost? Are we certain that there some times isn't extravagance or perhaps a lack of prudence in the CBC's purchases of offices and buildings? And may it not be that TV is being expanded too speedily and ambitiously—its coat cut beyond its cloth?

COOKIES — THEN AND NOW —

WHAT HAS HAPPENED to the good old-fashioned cookie jar, always full of goodies for any grubby-fisted small fry who wandered into Grandma's pantry?

One of the sweetest and most poignant memories of childhood is the pungent smell of baking in a kitchen sweet with spices as mothers and grandmothers worked nobly to keep the cookie supply ahead of demand.

Remember the pinwheel cookies, folded jelly-roll fashion? The quick ginger cookies rolled on a board and shaped with a round cutter? The gingerbread men with toothy raisin-studded grins? The coconut macaroons, the almond delights and mouthwatering molasses drop cookies?

Where are the Dresden delights, orange crescents and marmalade triangles of yesterday?

Today's men remember mother with flour on her hands and a rosy face as she bent to her baking tasks. Tomorrow's men will probably recall mother with tightly clutched purse and strained face as she bends to her task of choosing "counterfeit" cookies at the store.

But where have the old-time cookies vanished? Have they too, fallen victim to mass production techniques?

Cookies nowadays are bought neatly packaged in crackling cellophane from a chain store, whose never-ending shelves are stocked liberally with all varieties.

But something seems to have happened to the cookie between the time of its disappearance from the kitchen cookie jar and of its reappearance under the fluorescent lighting of the present day supermarket.

Today's article is a pale reflection of Grandma's toothsome delicacy. And often the flat-tasting product comes dressed up with a fake cherry or a melted jelly bean.

Modern cookies are mass-produced by men in white uniforms who work with 10,000 pounds of dough at a time. With production-line efficiency the ingredients are mixed in a huge churn, cut, baked and packaged from a conveyer belt.

"Never once touched by the human hand" is the slogan of their makers. But they need the touch of loving hands to be like those Grandma used to make.

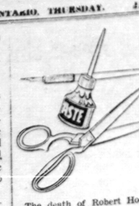
QUOTE FROM YESTERDAY —

Disguise our bondage as we will,
'Tis woman, woman, rules us still.
— Thomas Moore



The death of Robert Hood Saunders this week has aroused a more widespread feeling of grief throughout Ontario than has been experienced in a long time. It may have been partly due to the circumstances surrounding his death, but it is evident the people had faith in this administrator of the Province's biggest Public Utility. In recent years the opposition in the Legislature has been making quite a tabboo about the Public Relations expenditures in Ontario Hydro and seemed to be making some headway in undermining confidence in the great project. If the public is ever going to have even the faintest understanding of what is entailed in giving them light and power, it will cost money spent in public relations. Certainly the late Bob Saunders did everything he could to keep the people informed. Further evidence of George Drew's abilities was demonstrated when he selected Robt. H. Saunders to head Hydro. He brought us through a difficult period of development through selfless devotion to public duty and will go down in history as one of Ontario's greatest citizens.

We understand the new Board of Trustees of the North Walpole Public School Area is already hard at work planning visits to other areas and are digging into costs relating to the two alternatives open to them to accommodate the school population, both now and a few years hence. They have a difficult job ahead of them and it will demand much personal sacrifice. The board plan submit their findings to the ratepayers when they have something concrete to offer and it is hoped that ever that report may be it will be received according to the facts.

A Copenhagen man has been granted a divorce because his wife squeezed tooth paste tubes in the middle after he had carefully rolled them up from the end.

Deformed paste tubes probably cause more battles between the sexes than anything else with the possible exception of how high the window should be raised at night.

Even Esmeralda, who is perfect in so many ways, will grab a tube in the middle and isolate the contents from the lower end.

A man will watch the top and press vigorously, but he will watch in vain.

When he gives up he will find that the cream has been flowing quite freely from the bottom of the tube.

Yes! if there is any just cause for divorce, abusing a tube of cream is it.

It is unsanitary, inefficient and fas from economical.

We note, with some satisfaction, that Charles Cox, Reeve of Walpole Township, has been elected chairman of the Good Roads Committee on County Council. This is no honor to the Walpole Reeve and we naturally hope that such recognition might indicate that the Road Committee might be favorably disposed toward spending a reasonable part of their budget this year in completing the Nanticoke extension, as well as that lonely section of the front road between Nanticoke and the Woodhouse townline. We are fully aware that the Road Committee must be limited by their budget and we are not as conscious of the need for road improvement in other sections of the county as members of the committee. We do know it would be nice to see this work completed after fifteen years of unsatisfactory conditions.

EDUCATION COSTS STAGGER CALEDONIA COUNCILLORS

(Hamilton Spectator)

Although members of the Caledonia Village Council expected costs for education in 1954 would be high, they were aghast on January 10th when the final figures were turned in revealing a sum greater than half of the Village's tax revenue.

EDUCATION LEVY

Phil. J. Norton, clerk-treasurer, reported that the six-mill levy for public school purpose provided $12,996.64, but the amount actually paid to the Caledonia Board of Education in 1954 had been $21,816.00. Other special funds (new buildings), he stated, accounted for a further $10,730.33. In addition to these costs, Caledonia's share of high school costs had been $6,498.32.

"That totals $39,044.65 — or over half our tax income," stated Councillor Robert Gordon.

"There's something rotten in Denmark somewhere."

"Those figures are correct — they are part of a report being sent into the department in Toronto," stated Mr. Norton.

Recalling that council had learned of the school board's budget requirements in 1954 "by hearsay only" Councillor Gordon suggested that this year the board be asked to personally confer with the Council, as he felt "this year's chairman is just as bad as last year's for spending money."

Reeve William Winegard stated he felt "we are getting away on the wrong foot."

"We should have a talk with th board and see if this thing cannot be settled in a more amicable way," th reeve said. "We should talk over our problems with them, and discuss their problems so the taxpayer is not milked more than he should be."

"They must think we have a gold mine down here," stated Councillor

Farm Forum Press Correspondent, Haldimand County

Last Monday evening Fall Fairs were the subject of much discussion by the Farm Forums.

Caledonia Fair is the only one within the County however several others are well attended by Haldimand farmers, those being held at Binbrook, Mast Seneca F.F. summed up the feelings expressed by saying "It very progressive, continually adopting new things."

Some suggested improvements were (a) standardization of both exhibits and judging for the whole province (b) larger amounts of grain shows so as to discourage hand picking resulting in more farmers exhibiting (c) elimination of commercial classes at more fairs, (d) not allowing the showing of the same article year after year, e.g. needlework, (e) calves entered in a class should be numbered in the order of their age to enable the judge to know how large the animal is in relation to its age and (f) Caledonia Fair could use considerably more exhibit space.

To encourage better farming it was suggested that (a) the Fair sponsor field crop competitions in all grains, (b) keener cattle judges be employed, and (c) continue to maintain the 4H club projects. A commitment on this last point by Undersecretary F.F. was that "4H clubs have been doing an excellent job, and we even noticed girls powdering their calves with face powder at the Fair." I wonder if they aren't referring to some other part of the Fair!

Getting back to our subject, the final question concerned improvement of the midway and other entertainment. It was expressed by several groups that (a) games of chance should be run by local organizations so as to maintain the earnings to spend on local projects, (b) lunch booths should be set up to give customers satisfaction and not to earn a fast dollar, and (c) more than one second to the Merry-go-Round would be appreciated.

A "fair share" of credit is due to Reg. Elizabeth of the Caledonia Fair Board for helping make the panel discussion on the broadcast "Farm Radio Forum" so interesting.
