PREVENT A THIRD WORLD WAR --

by Lewis Milligan

FIELD MARSHAL Viscount Montgomery Deputy Supreme Commander of North Atlantic Treaty Organization forces in Europe, told a press conference at Bergen, Norway, recently that "if a counterpart of NATO had existed before the last war there would not have been any war."

How many of the major and the minor tragedies of this world in the past have hung on that little word "if"! And that applies especially to European wars from Napoleon on-ward. We can now say that if that little Corsican warmonger had been faced with an armed Atlantic alliance he never would have attempted to overrun the whole of Europe. As it was, Britain fought Napoleon alone, while the Unted States, nominally neutral, cut off trade with Britain, entered into agreements with France and tried to annex Canada in the war of 1812 when Napoleon launched his campaign against Russia.

A hundred years later the German Kaiser declared war on Britain and France with the object of repeating the Napoleonic conquests of Europe, plus the British Empire; which he would never have attempted IF he thought he would have to face an Atlantic alliance with the United States. But the United States was again neutral and looked on the conflict for two years while britain was fighting alone. Twenty years later, Hitler made the same miscalculation, gambling on the neutrality of the United States, in his planned blitzkrieg for world conquest. Britain again had to fight alone until the United States was stabbed in the back by Japan at Pearl Harbour. That treacherous blow knocked all the neutrality out of the United States and sent the American people fighting mad into the war for their own safety.

Hindsight is easier than forsight, and all our ifs about the past are vain unless we apply them to the present and profit by our mistakes. That is what Montgomery meant when he applied the "if" to the beginning of the last war, and implied that if the western nations failed to support the North Atlantic Alliance, a third world war would be inevitable in view of the growing military might and aggressive policys

As much as we hate war and want to live at peace with all men, we cannot afford to leave ourselves open to attack by nations whose rulers, puffed up with their absolute power at nome, seek to extend it to the rest of the world. All dictators down through the ages have been rapacious for more and more power, and they have only been checked at home by assassination and abroad by war. But they have never gone to war with a nation that they knew they could not conquer. Like the bully in the schoolyard, they would never hit a nation of their own size or fighting strength, but sometimes they

NATO was organized as a defensive alliance by nations that had shown their desire for world peace by demobilizing their fighting forces immediately after the last war. The big German bully was well beaten and we imagined the horrible example of that beating was sufficient to discourage any sane nation from starting another such conflict. But we did not reckon with the ingrained insanity of Communism, the declared aim of which is conquest by conspiracy and world revolution. Seeing the disarament of his former allies, the Red lunatic in the Kremlin asylum thought here was his chance for a coup de main. With nearly half the world within his grasp, the weakened remainder was his for the taking of it! And so it might have been if the western nations had not been awakened from their dream of peace by the fact that they were being sniped and sapped by Moscow-trained political perverts from within, in preparation for the final coup. NATO arose out of that situation, and If only that alliance is maintained at full strength it can disillusion the Red world revolution-

TIME ON OUR HANDS - -

THERE OUGHTA BE A LAW. Well, there cannot, really, be a legal pro-hibitition, but perhaps appointment of an official municipal "clock watcher" would help. After all, here is a glaring disregard of a people's basic right.

Nothing is more annoying than to see clocks on street coners, on business houses and other buildings differing in the time they show at any given hour.

omething should be done to see that they maintain the same time. Not, necessarily, the correct time. That's beside the point and possibly is seeking the unattainable. Just the

What seems to be required is a functionary — in or out of uniform — who would go up and down a street pointing out to a careless owner that the big clock above his door is a minute or two off. The right time would be that on the clock designated by the municipity

That would end excuses for missed appoint

Walk down any Canadian street and the clock in front of the jeweler's store will say it is 11 o'clock. Right across the street the big timepiece above the door of a public building will say it is 11:02. In the next block the clock on the corner will show the time as 11:01. Which is to be believed?

The situation is not peculiar to Canada of coarse. A recent visiter to England found the same thing there and, in fact, went as far as to suggest publicly passage of an act of parliament that would require clocks on public view to be kept to the same time.

He didn't advocate the correct time, He just wanted uniformity The visitor to England, having unburdened himself of his complaint, offered the simplest solution to the whole thing. He said:

COMPETITION FROM NEW CITIZENS --

"Carry a watch."

by Joseph Lister Rutledge

WHILE THE EARNINGS of workers for the seven-month period, January to July, f this year reached the substantial total of $6,777 million or $120 million more than for the months of last year, the labor income in manufacturing for the same periods was down $37 million. Not much, but certainly an item worthy of attention. Had this resulted from the possible recession that has been much in our minds, it would have affected all employment income. It appeared only in industrial employmend and gave some color to the fear that we had priced ourselves out of our most available markets. There is some supporting evidence in the fact that we are buying more from abroad where prices are lower than ours, and selling less abroad because our prices are too high.

The unemployment in manufacturing, and the result lower wage total, may result from the fact that we have become too choosy. We don't look for work, we look for special jobs at special prices. There is some evidence here It is estimated that 170,000 immigrants will enter Canada this year. At least 100,000 of this number will be looking for work. On the evidence of past experience 99% of these employables will be placed in a matter of days or at worst in a week or two, despite the handicaps of unfamiliar language and new methods and customs. They find jobs because that is what they look for-not a particular job, just a job; and not at $2.50 an hour, just at what the job can reasonably pay. These new citizens are anxious to earn and to learn. As they learn there is the opportunity for better jobs; perhaps, at last, for the job that does pay $2.50 an hour, or more. But first there is the will to do any honest work, for honest work eventually leads somewhere worthwhile.

There are people who think that the way to end unemployment and to maintain wages is to close the door on such eager and adoptable workers and to make a closed preserve of our employment so that wages can be persistently advanced. The evidence is against them. Thinking realistically, we know that the increasing volume of goods we are buying from abroad is produced by just such workers as these new citizens, and keeping our doors barred against them is no answer. It is better for them to produce goods here, where we have the work content and values of production, than to produce them elsewhere to sell here. That way all we can possibly have is disadvantage.

EVERLASTING VALUES — _

FOR PEOPLE in Canada and other lands across the seas from old London, there is a special interest in the latest discovery that excited archaeologists in Britain.

It's the spectacular find of a Roman temple buried in the bombed areas of the ancient city-a temple which yielded among other treasures a finely-carved head of the god Mithras.

Experts have labelled the carving as central Italian marble, dated about 200AD. But Mithras is much older than that. He was a great Persian diety of centuries before Christ. The Mithras cult was introduced to Rome about

What is of interest in these modern daysapart from the immense value to historiansis that Mithras was regarded not only as the god of light and strength, but also as the god of probity and right dealing. As such, he was followed by soldiers on the one hand and merchants and traders on the other.

The London temple is described by W. F. Grimes, director of the London Museum, as a building of stone and tile, about 60 feet long by 25 feet wide. The body of the temple was divided into the nave and aisles by means of colonnades.

PEASON FOR PAILUNESS

The ground plan of this ancient house of worship can clearly be seen since removal of the earth .that has covered it for centuries. The apse would have been the chief centre for ritual. Near it, in a corner, is a timber-lined well from which came the water necessary for religious ceremonies.

The Mithras head is one of many relics found there, and the whole statue probably formed part of a group of figures. This temple obviously was the well-built shrine of a wealthy community, with fine furnishings from the eastern Mediterranean. Among the worshippers were merchants, perhaps foreigners from distant parts. When it was built in the dim past - and for centuries before that - men had dedicated themselves to integrity as a way to success in

It is difficult to believe that Thirty years have passed since the late W. T. Brown performed a 6. It always seems to require one that always seems to require one of the solemn bonds of matrimony John Bradden McMillen and Lena Reynolds. It was a beautiful morning and happiness radiated from the faces of the one more degree of surrender of participants as they made ready to human liberty.

REASON FOR BALDNESS

"There is always a reason for baldness," continued this nationally regrowing hair. If there is any fuzz at all, we can restore a healthy scalp ness," continued this nationally known authority. "Hair cannot grow through a scalp that is infected with dandruff, excessive oilness, or extreme dryness. A scalp that has never been exercised cannot be expected to produce healthy hair." Men and yes, women too, walk the streets is not completely delighted with re-pected to produce healthy hair." Men and yes, women too, walk the streets today, completely devoid of nature's greatest ornament — hair. Simply because they were not taught the basic rules of hair and scalp hygiene while they were growing up. "The simple answer," emphasized this expert is that children should be taught the same simple basic rules of hair and scalp hygiene that they are taught for the proper care of their teeth. If this were the case, baldness would be a rarity today!"

HEREDITY NOT INVOLVED

Trichologist Jarell dodged no issues. He quickly took up the most widely spread theory of baldness — heredity. "Mankind's unrealist'c belief that baldness is hereditry stems from the stoday to the proportion of the pro that baldness is hereditry stems from in any way.
