PROVINCIAL POLICE START SAFE-DRIVING CAMPAIGN

The Provincial Police safe-driving campaign this week is giving particular attention to cars being driven with defective lights. In the four days, 279 traffic violators were nabbed for various offences, including drunk driving, speeding, defective brakes, unreadable markers, failure to report change of address, failure to produce license, no flags on trucks and illegal parking.

Senior officials at Toronto were pleased with results of the campaign that began last week. In the four days, 279 traffic violators were nabbed for various offences, including drunk driving, speeding, defective brakes, unreadable markers, failure to report change of address, failure to produce license, no flags on trucks and illegal parking.

Motorists and citizens generally have been asked to check on offences. Attorney-General Kelso Roberts has invited citizens to advise police in writing of incidents which they feel should be investigated.

Mr. Roberts said he will also study a suggestion that professional drivers, chauffeurs, taxi and truck drivers, be organized into highway vigilantes to report violations to police.
