ANNE HIRST Your Family Counselor

"Dear Anne Hirst: Ever since my wife and I married five ears ago, we have read your column together. Now when I really need some good advice, I feel I will have it from you. "About a month ago, my wife took our three children and left our little farm for her parents' home in the city. I knew she had been lonely, we have no nearby neighbors and she seldom could leave the place. She lost touch with her friends, she grew melancholy, but I guess I didn't realize how hard it really was for her until the day she left.

"I went right after her, of course, and I used every argument I could think of. (I should remind you that we have loved each other perfectly.) After several visits I did persuade her to come back with me for two days, and they were the happiest I can remember. Now, a week later, she still refuses o come here to live - and she thinks she likes an old beau who looked her up.

"My whole life is bound up in my family and our farm. The youngsters and I get along fine. and I miss them beyond words. How can I get her back? She agrees with all I say, but repeats she just can't stand living ARTHUR"

When a girl marries, she * feels she can cope with any new pattern of living so long * as she shares it with the man * she loves. But sometimes the reality overwhelms her. Your

"You guessed it. I fell in love with an old friend, and I felt I could not live without him. When my husband heard of it, he promised he would stop drinking and take care of us. I confess I did not believe single word he said, but I agreed partly for the boy's sake; he adores his dad. "My husband has not had a drink since, and that was three years ago. unexpected problems to face A few years ago it was foot and mouth disease, then came New castle disease in poultry, and now it is rables. Of the three rabies is the most dangerous because of its menace to children. However, it is comforting to know that it can be controlled to a certain extent - by vaccination of work dogs and ousehold pets. That, however, does not protect children from stray dogs that may come around, or from foxes, if a family happens to live near a wooded area. As most people know, the dread disease is usually passed on to humans by the bite of an animal but we should remember that the infection is in the saliva of the animal and may be transmitted quite innocently if a dog licks a child who may have a scratch or skin abrasion - that is, if the dog has already contracted the disease. Perhaps the most disquieting

contained in the warning

Yes, there is reason for worry and for every precaution to be taken - that is, by seeing to it that our dogs are vaccinated against the disease and by warning children not to pet strange dogs. And how thankful we should be that vaccination is possible - thanks to the dangerous and untiring research work carried out by Louis Pasteur many years ago. Pasteur risked his own life a good many times in carrying out his experiments before the first inoculation of a child bitten by a mad dog was possible. The experiment was successful and led to the formation of the Pasteur !nstitute in 1888. Had it not been for Pasteur the danger from the present outbreak of rabies would be far greater. That people are aware of the danger is evident as last week, when I phoned our 'vet' about having our two dogs in oculated I was told his supply of vaccine was exhausted b that more was on the way.

Now have a bunch of cards selected from one deck, exchange the decks and have the cards returned to the new deck. You may easily locate and pick out each chosen card. Flower Stunt

Have a package of fifteen or more spring flowers in clips. Also a fish bowl or jar and a large handkerchief. Show the hand kerchief and bowl. Pick up the handkerchief with the flowers under it. Drape it over the bowl and release the flowers. Draw the handkerchief off quickly and the bowl is seen full of flowers.

Bill and Lemon Trick Borrow three or four bills and place them in a paper bag. Burn the bag. Have a lemon freely chosen by a spectator. Cut the chosen lemon open with a knife and take out the bills. This is how it is done. Procure a one pound, flat bottom, paper grocery bag. In one side starting an inch and a half from the top, cut a slit about two inches long. Holding the opened bag with the cut slit at the back, borrow a few bills and fold them to a quarter of their length. Place them in the bag (pushing them through the slit into the palm of the other hand) and fold the top over to close the bag. Now set the bag on the front of your table. Have a lemon chosen from several in a dish. Cut a slot in the lemon to show it is a real lemon. Show the lemon on all sides. Borrow a handkerchief and place the lemon under t in the hand which contains the palmed bills. Push the bills into the slot in the lemon and then lay the lemon on the table with the slot and bills at the rear. Pick up the paper bag and crush and burn it. Then pick up the lemon and cut it in half and take out the bills.

Mars is not so red as it appears to the naked eye. One of the best observers of it has compared it to an opal in the diversity of aspect that it shows to different observers from different points of view. No other planet has been so subjected to controversy over what appear, on its surface. This is partly due to its being the only planet whose surface is without doubt open to our viev. and in a situation where it can be minutely studied, and partly to the fact that the controversy involves questions concerning life and intelligence, which are always of intense human interest. Matters of this vital sort are never accepted without dispute. That is one way of getting at the truth. In the intensity of the discussion the question of the existence of the phenomena and that of the meaning ascribed to-them are sometimes unnecessarily made to depend upon each other. In the case of Mars it may well be that there is less difference of opinion as to what is really seen on its surface than as to the meaning of the phenomena. There are recorded observations made of Mars as early as 272 B.C., more than two thousand years ago, and it has been nearly two hundred and fifty years since the snow-caps were first seen.
