corn per acre to ensure a good crop. By this is meant that there must be sufficient plants per acre of the maximum yield is to be obtained. This has been discussed in this column on former occasions but it might be good idea to refresh our memories. According to most authorities there must be a plant population of at least 16,000 per acre to get the best hard to get the best arrangement you would have the required number.

Another factor to remember is that to get the best corp must be adequately fed. To produce a 100 bushel crop of corn to its estimated that it will require a total of 150 hs. of nitrogen, 60 hs. of phosphoric acid and 120 hs. of phosphoric acid and 120 hs. of potash. Part of this will actually be used in the porduction of the ears and the balance is needed to produce the stalk and leaves without which the crop would not be grown at all. This would be the equivalent of about.
