ANNE HIRST Your Family Counselor

When a man and his wife are business partners, differences are bound to arise that sometimes ravage the good will which should prevail, and their uance can affect the conduct of the mutual enterprises. As in marriage, it seems to be must give in to the "better udgment" of her husband; but when his criticisms are maniestly unfair, that is hard to

One wife is at her wits' end. "We've been married 21 years, and have had our own business since '47: we both work awfully hard, he out on the truck and I in the store. We love each other an awful lot," she explains, "and have never had many cross words until late My husband seems to want to boss me around, and he says cruel things that hurt so I cannot help but say things back which I regret. He says spend everything we make which I don't; I pay the bills and put what's left back in the business. Now he's mad because our bank balance is less than last year - and it is he that draws more cheques than I. He seems to be money-crazy 'His folks all love me, and have often said he wouldn't have had anything alone. He used to drink a lot, and he has quit it. But he surely gets rude and snappy; when he sees I won't take it, he stops fussing and then he's so good - until group of women turn from their prayers to operate a highy efficient farm. They keep about 500 hens, grow fruits and vegetables — and raise goats. The priory's meticulo clean goathouse has stalls for 25 milking goats. In a corner, a wooden platform equipped with a neck-yoke is where "Nougatine" and her sisters turns munching from a pail of oats while being milked. On the wall hangs a chart recording the milk given by each member of the herd, for these nuns are business-like farmers. Along the river bank is the goat pasture. The grass is thick and the land rich, but not because nature made it that way. These farmers in blue aprons are completely up-to-date on agricultural methods. Their alkaline soil last fall was treated with limestone and this spring will be enriched by growing clover and alfalfa. Their pasture flourishes with the help of modern chemica fertilizers, scientifically applied to meet the needs of the soil. After these lucky goats have grazed their fill, their thrifty keepers protect the grass by driving the herd into a "lounging area" where "Cascade, "Blanchette" and the others take their ease, nibbling or straw and making milk. At sundown, the goats with the quaint names quietly obey the young nun's call and file into the goathouse with its whitewashed stalls. Fruits and vegetables grown on the priory farm are carefully chosen for their food value. A special variety of black raspberry is cultivated because it is high in vitamins. The henhouse is a model of efficiency. It is not so surprising then, to see these secluded fields being plowed with a shiny new tractor, confide driven by a nun in billow skirts.
