ANNE HIRST Your Family Counselor

"Dear Anne Hirst: My problem | * Many a girl balks at a foris breaking my heart and making me ill with loneliness. My only daughter went with a boy two years and then ELOPEDafter I had scrimped and saved for a beautiful and honorable wedding. I feel I am a terrible ... I have never worked or belonged to clubs; I've lived just for my children, and the only repayment I've asked is love and consideration.

• girl in love wants just one • thing - to belong to her man * as soon as possible. I am sure your daughter listened patient-* ly time after time to your * elaborate plans, but all the • while she was growing more restless. Suddenly she thought, "Why wait? We'll be just as * much married if we run off, * and we can start our honeymoon tomorrow!" She did not know how much this wedding * meant to you; she thought only of herself, and persuaded her fiance that an elopement would • be fun. So they left. When they returned it was natural for you to show your distress. When she saw how she had hurt you, she escaped from your complaints and went * to her husband's family. There * she is living - and thinks you are still angry. I do not be · lieve she has stopped loving you, but she is relieved to be away from your laments. She * is self-centered in her new happiness, and believes that should satisfy you, too.

* You say all you wanted was her happiness. Well, she has it now. Can't you understand * that and leave her alone? One * day she will pop in to see you and before you know it, you two will be close again.

Spoiling a child is no guarantee she will love you for it. Your daughter has taken your * attention as her due; until she * matures, she will not feel properly grateful.

Don't blame her husband's * family. She is free: when she wants to see you, they will not * object. In your place I should drop in on her some day - and be careful to act as a dear * friend, not as a hurt mother. Forget all you have done for her and only show how glad you are to see her. If she resents your coming, accept this. She will come around when she sees you are no longer hurt or resentful.

Irish Sweepstakes Swindle Exposed!

The truth about the Irish | fraudulent receipts, or counter Sweepstake operations in the foils." United States and Canada have never been told. A cloak of high-pressure publicity has shielded the sinister racketeering done under its glamorized name. But, now, for the first time, the Police Gazette has unearthed the shocking story.

Three times a year sweepstake drawings are held in Dublin based on the famous English turf classics, the Grand National, the Derby and the Cambridgeshire. Newspaper throughout Canada and the U.S. sensationally publish lists of Irish Sweepstakes winners and splash the photos of the jubi-lant winners over their front pages.
