

ANNE HIRST Your Family Counselor

NEW DAUGHTER-IN-LAW TELLS A HAPPY TALE

Instead of the forlorn recital of marital woes that usually starts this column, today I quote from a bride's pen to a mother-in-law whose understanding presents a pattern that others could well follow.

"Please print this, Anne Hirst," the joyful girl writes, "to show your readers that all mother-in-laws are not like the ones who write you about."

"My new husband earns a small salary, so his mother offered us her upper floor until we get a place of our own. She added a bath and kitchenette, and we have private lock on our door. We live in such seclusion that sometimes I feel embarrassed. Our privacy is complete. She never comes up with-out telephoning first; she goes marketing with me only when I ask her, and never advises what to buy nor tells me her son likes things cooked. She is more like an old friend than an in-law."

"Our friends run in and out as they like and, though sometimes they stay late, she never finds out. She knows it. If she finds we expect company, a cake out of her oven appears, or a tray of assorted sandwiches; she never joins us unless we especially invite her. We all go to the same church, and when my husband wants a round of golf early, she never says a word. There are things we don't agree about, of course, and by consent we don't discuss them. Her son worships her, and I am beginning to."

"I was the daughter of parents who got a divorce, and now I often think if my mother had been like her, they wouldn't have."

"My husband and I have our differences, too, but we've always had too much respect for each other to let it come to a quarrel. Perhaps this is just a continued honeymoon phase and our marriage may descend to such things later, but I don't believe it. Since I've known his mother, I see why he is so sweet and thoughtful. I am happier than I ever dreamed of, and all I want is to deserve it. My only concern is that when we can afford a place of our own, I won't want to go!"

"TO 'HUMBLE': A mother-in-law like yours brings out the best in everyone who knows her. She understands how precious one's privacy is, so she minds her own affairs and just stands by if you need her. How fortunate you are and how wise to be humble! She has her reward too, in your appreciation and growing devotion.

Let us both hope that possessive mothers-in-law reading your tribute today will resolve to cut the silver cord and let their sons and wives live their own lives, too. How splendid their reward would be!"

BOY PROBLEM

"Dear Anne Hirst: Since my freshman year I've like a boy very much. This year we'll both be seniors. He has never dated me, but I would like to. I can't forget him, and whenever I see him (which is seldom), I like him more."

"Another boy has been fairly interested in me this summer, but whenever another girl comes along, he turns his attention to her. He is very popular, and I like him a lot. I see him almost daily, since he is a lifeguard at the pool where I swim. I've never dated him."

"A third boy has been dating me, but I wouldn't want him as a boy friend. I know he's going to ask me to go steady, how can I refuse without hurting his feelings? He gets too familiar."

"I don't know what to do about the first two, and I respect your opinion. I know one girl whom you have helped very much. Thank you."

MIXED-UP TEEN-AGER

"Your experience with these boys is characteristic of teenagers. I have a friend who is a boy, and she is very popular, and I like him a lot. I see him almost daily, since he is a lifeguard at the pool where I swim. I've never dated him."

"I have faced problems like those that appear here, tell Anne Hirst how you solved them. Other readers will appreciate sharing your experience. Write Anne Hirst at Box 1, 121 Eighteenth St. New Toronto, Ont."

How Supermarkets Trap Your Dollars

An efficient supermarket operates at a net profit of only about one percent of sales. Thus when a supermarket makes money on the bargains that pull you into the store, it must see to it that you also buy some high-profit merchandise like candy, jellies, spices, gourmet items, and all non-foods. How is that done? You sell these things to yourself.

You drift around the self-service super in a kind of trance. Touching, feeling, picking up the merchandise, you buy on impulse—far more lavishly than in a clerk-manned store. The average supermarket customer makes seven unplanned, impulse purchases for every three planned purchases, a study of shopping habits has shown.

Have you ever gone into a supermarket for a pound of coffee and come out with two jars of olives, a new anchovy spread and a gadget can-opener as well? If so, you're only behaving normally in a market astutely designed to turn your visit into a buying spree.

For example: Bend down at the dairy case for eggs. Suddenly your eyes come level with jars of fresh fruit salad, or cel-lopine, wrapped, imported Swiss cheese. You can't resist sliding these high-markup delicacies into your basket. Supermarkets rarely make you walk for impulse items; only for staples.

You steer around a corner and nearly collide with a red pyramid of tomato-ketchup bottles. Hypnotized by the mass display, you take a bottle—even though you may have had no notion of buying ketchup. Supermarkets have found that any item erected into a solid display will sell perhaps ten times faster than the same item set out on regular shelves.

Another stratagem is to spot certain big-markup items in several different places. Count how many times you leave

BATTLE OF THE STREET CORNERS — Chicago Board of Health mobilized inoculation team sets up on a street corner of the polo stricken West Side as the city fights to curb the outbreak before the peak of the polio season, which usually occurs in mid-August. Door-to-door solicitation was used to bring people to the makeshift clinics as polio cases topped 600 in the city's worst stage of the disease. Previous worst season: 1952, with 170 cases totaled during the same period of time. Hordest hit, children, compared to a ratio of only 25.8 cases per 100,000 in children between the ages of five and 15 — the group previously most inoculated with the Salk vaccine.

CHRONICLES OF GINGER FARM
by Gwendoline P. Clarke

This has been the most insectivorous summer I ever remember. Look where you will the air is full of bugs of some kind — things that hop, fly or crawl. Some that do all three. And I should know! Some kind of little black fly has nearly driven me crazy — and I am the only one it bites. The flies are so small they can get through the screen netting. They have tiny wings, they also hop and they are almost black. You would think anything so small could be as vicious. The aftermath of their bites has given me restless nights for the last two nights — except the last two nights — and then only because I have been buying and spraying insecticide.

However, bites or no bites, I have been very busy — moving house. Until now, with eleven rooms to play around in I seem to have had no space. I spread myself and my belongings all over the house. And if there is anything that clutters up a place like old papers, books, clippings and so forth, I have yet to meet it. So after a consultation with Partner, it was decided I should take over a room upstairs — it used to be Bob's bedroom. First it had to be cleaned and a new place found for boyhood's remaining treasures. And, with Partner's help a double bed to take down and remove to the basement; and cupboards and shelves to set up in its place. And then began the grand job of collecting my belongings and carting them upstairs. In the middle of this things began to happen outside. One man came in to cut a field of hay at the back of the farm. Another man was busy in the front field. Then came the hayloadeer and after him a big rig from the Department of Highways. I never saw anything with such huge rubber wheels as all four of them. It was a coil-testing outfit, sent in to take samples of the soil for construction purposes. The men used a 12-inch bore, went down about eight feet, took a sample of the soil, and then filled the hole up again. I think they were doing another problem. Until I got used to it I won't be able to write for looking out of the window! I didn't realize that a grand view of the world was from upstairs. The window faces north-west, overlooks our driveway, lots of trees and green fields, No. 25 Highway, and the city.

Yesterday we had a quiet day until about four o'clock. Then things began to pop. First a very welcome caller, then a very welcome caller, and finally Bob and Joy. And they all wanted to take home with them. With eggs selling at 74¢ they were glad to get them at what was better and bigger eggs at a lower price.

Doing the job myself. If I had known it was going to pour with rain so soon I would have waited for help as the storm very effectively put an end to all outside activity for the rest of the day. However, the job is done now and I am settled down — more or less — in my new quarters. But I have run up against another problem. Until I got used to it I won't be able to write for looking out of the window! I didn't realize that a grand view of the world was from upstairs. The window faces north-west, overlooks our driveway, lots of trees and green fields, No. 25 Highway, and the city.

EGYPT GIRLS FOR SHOWDOWN — This picture, transmitted by radio, shows teachers, recruited by Egypt's National Guard mobilization program, being instructed in use of rifles at Ouzim, Egypt. Egyptian president, Gamal Abdel Nasser, has threatened all-out resistance should attempt by force be made to take over the vital Suez Canal.

Bonnie Scotland Comes With Us

Our vacation was over. We had already said good-bye to Peter's family. Now the time had come to say good-bye to Scotland.

Peter and I stood on the deck of the Transylvania, anchored in the Clyde, our elbows on the rail, watching twilight thrumming her lengthening fingers into the lanes and streets of Glasgow-lown. But our thoughts were far away—up wild gales to the north, down pleasant countryside to the south, sorting out a hundred memories, mentally packing them into neat bundles to store in mind and heart.

Memories are riches, and we had great riches in store—the memory of Oban, where we ate fish and chips on a red-checked tablecloth, where we lingered long over the woolens for sale, soft as a baby's cheek to the finger tip; Oban, where the sea air was cold sharp with the pungency of salt spray and the romance of the Western Isles just over the tumbling horizon; Oban, where the lone piper on the Esplanade issued an invitation to resist.

How could we ever forget the magic of "the bonnie, bonnie banks of Loch Lomond" where the banks of Loch Lomond were so thick with moss and pebbles, in an effort to carry some magic away with us; or the banks of Loch Lomond, where the banks of Loch Lomond were so thick with moss and pebbles, in an effort to carry some magic away with us; or the banks of Loch Lomond, where the banks of Loch Lomond were so thick with moss and pebbles, in an effort to carry some magic away with us.

On some distant night on a far-off shore, we would unpack and dust off these memories, and the magic of the bonnie, bonnie banks of Loch Lomond would be standing on a swinging bridge in Inverness, watching the sun sinking in a soft glow of Turnerian colors behind the chimney tops, turning the River Ness into a painter's palette. And in the distance we would hear again a woman's deep-throated laughter and the haunting strains of the bagpipes.

Or we would be seeing again the wistful ruin that is Melrose Abbey, with the fragile lacework of its Crown of Thorns window, open to the wind and the rain, its cobbler traceries silhouetted against a darkening sky.

We would not soon forget the jewellike setting of Dryburgh Abbey, with its yew trees and hawthorn hedges, or that perfect moment when two wee lassies asked us the time of day and then disappeared like a puff of smoke into the foliage among the trees, from which smoke curled lazily upward.

Of course, the setting of its disadvantages too. Some of the drawbacks of the house were no sooner here I got up stairs for instance. Sometimes from the door bell or telephone rings. And the phone rings times before I can get to it. Daughter says — "Put in an extension phone." Good idea, I think. We have enough calls coming in to warrant the expense. Outgoing calls, I can range to make when I am downstairs. Partner says it looks as if we have come to the end of the ways — he looks at the door and says — "Put in an extension phone."
