ANNE HIRST Your Family Counselor

My real gratitude to you for that article you printed about the troubles of stepmothers! The letter that you answered could have come from me, for I've been in the writer's shoes for three years. The only difference is that my shoes hurt even more than hers do. "I should have anticipated my experience, because even before we married, my husband's family informed me of the 'rules' they were using to bring up his fouryear-old son, and said they expected me to follow them. I und the boy dreadfully spoiled, and obviously their idea was to continue that; but when he pecame so obstinate there was no managing him, they never ac epted the responsibility. I liked the child from the first, and thought I had won his affection, but he has used all his shabby little tricks to defeat my dis ciplinary efforts, and even boasted about it!

"It is frustrating to stand aside and see the life and soul of a child twisted into wrongdoing, especially toward deceit. If these people had his good at heart they would let us alone, for only that way is there a chance I can make something decent of him. My husband takes his family's part, and thinks they

* Your husband is taking the weakest way to make his child love him; by spoiling him so thoroughly he avoids unpleasant argument, but the boy will feel contempt for a parent whom he can defy, and will not be fooled for long. When things start moving around here they seem to keep moving . . . the Royal Winter Fair; Partner goes north; visitors; an addition to the family; Ross displays two more teeth and then gets up on his feet - at nine months.

Now for the details. Last Monday Partner and I put in a few pleasant hours at 'the Royal". We always enjoy it better than the C.N.E. - less crowded and everything being under one roof means less walking. The flowers were simply wonderful, roses and mums predominating but there were also well arranged exhibits of African violets, cacti and begonias. And we were completely fascinated by flowers resembling birds in flight. I believe the species is called "Bird of Paradise". Really gorgeous.

Fer awhile we watched the dairy cattle being judged and were absolutely amazed at the number of entries - particularly in the Ayrshire class. The Ayrshires have always been our favourite breed but we were often told they were not popular. And yet there were 32 entries in the one class we watched being judged. At the conclusion the judge was scratching his head and small wonder - it must have been harder work than judging a beauty contest.

The World Championship Wheat was of special interest to our own little corner of England. Mr. Davidson didn't make any mistake in saying Essex is a good farming district. We know it. We left the Royal about six o'clock and went over to visit Daughter and her family. The new baby had had a touch of congestion for a few days but has since recovered. Late in the evening Art drove us home so we are beginning to feel as if our close proximity to Toronto is really paying off.

However, they insisted that I go with them as they had never been to the Royal and wouldn't know their way around. So I went but when we visited the catttle barns I sat on a bale of hay and let hem wander around by themselves. And you know it is surprising who and what you can see from a bale of hay! Cattle going back and forth to the show ring; exhibitors anxious and pre-occupied on the way out; abilant or downcast on the way back, depending upon how their animals performed. I saw the boys and girls of the 4-H clubs showing 92 steers - and what a showing that was. I was so glad the handsome steer with its lovey white coat carried away top honours. It had a fine carriage and apparently a docile disposition I was also very interested in the Canadian bred cattle from Quebec, which according to the poster were introduced into Canada by the French in 1541. Angry Elephants Hurled Trees

Two famous hunters, John F. Burger and Micky Norton, went out after elephant ivory in the Congo one morning, taking opposite directions. Burger returned with two prize trophies, but Norton hadn't returned even by next morning, so Burger set out with trackers fearing that the worst might have happened to worst might have happened to Eventually they came to steep banks of a tributary of the Congo River, and deep down the ravine could hear Norton calling for help. He lay buried under hundreds of branches and tree-trunks, and was lucky to be

He had shot a prize bull-elephant and was admiring the tusks when suddenly he was charged by the infuriated herd. Instinctively he ran for the river and slid down its bank, which was too steep for them to follow. But that did not deter them from trying to settle the score.

He found himself being covered by an avalanche of branches and young trees which they were ssing down on him in an effort to bury him alive! The assault lasted until darkness set in, when the herd moved away. t took Burger and his boys more than an hour to free Norton.

Burger was working in a min-ing camp on the Lupa goldfields, fanganyika, when illness confined him to his bed. His only helper was an old native cook named Dan who claimed that he'd cooked for Dr. Livinstone and seen the historic meeting with Stanley in 1871 Burgarhy with Stanley in 1871. Burger of-ten needed his help at night, but once he'd fallen asleep only a charge of dynamite could awaken him, so Burger tied one end of a length of twine to one of Dan's toes, the other to a fourgallon tin of water mounted on a bracket over his head. If pulling string No. 1 was ineffective, Burger was determined to try

One daybreak, after a sleepless night, he managed to wake Dan with No. 2 and ordered him to make toast and coffee. Soon a fre was hurning brighty at the are was burning briskly at the foot of his bed, but a little later . dead silence and no sign of

His feet were stretched out towards the fire, and between the oes of each he'd wedged two eces of toast, now burnt black. Another time he caught Dan

Burger relates exciting and amusing bush experiences in Adventures". On e in Elizabethville he passed a handcart with coffin aboard. A sorrowing husband was burying his wife, and the funeral procession had halted outside a pub to "drown" their sorrow. Two days later he passed the same procession two streets farther down town. The mourners were then inside the last bar but one en route to the training the morning coffee through one of his socks.

As hunter, miner and trader,

Burger's most astonishing encounter was with "Professor Morrisey," the world's greatest snake man, in Durban. His act consisted in taking the bites of the most poisonous reptiles, including a twelve-foot deadly King Cobra of India, but he said he wanted to procure black and green mambas and open his show by taking the bite from the black mamba Africa's deadliest, most feared reptile, aptly called "the shadow f death."

Burger took him out to the sugar plantations of Natal's north coast, where he caught a seven-foot green mamba — and brought it back in the rickshaw, pushed into his shirt, with his belt and buttons securely fastened and a tie round his neck, to make sure it didn't escape.

He the nannounced that he would take its bite the next evening, and his tent was packed to suffocation by a crowd intent on seeing what a man looks like when he dies from mamba bite. Holding it firmly in his right hand before the spellbound audi-ence, Morrisey pushed his left forearm under its snout. As the fangs fastened on it, he released his hold with the right hand, and for some seconds the mamba hung suspended, with the fangs deeply embedded.

The jaws were then gently released, the snake replaced in its cage, and he held out his arm for inspection. Blood began to flow from the deep punctures, which he cauterized, then poured some serum into the wounds, saying he hoped to see them all back the next night, when he would take a bite from a puff-A few minutes later he slumped to the ground, showing all the signs of neurotoxic poisoning: troubled breathing, dilated eyes, rapid pulse and arm pains. Then he complained of a feeling of suffocation and failing sight; but he refused to have a doctor The next morning Burger was mazed to find him sitting in his tent, taking tea. He didn't put on a show for a further two days, then took the puff-adder's bite as His incredible resistance to the most deadly snake-venom, Burger says, puzzled doctors. To satisfy sceptical onlookers, one night he allowed the mamba to bite a stray dog. It died within half-an-hour, and cost him a $30

He had complete faith in serum which he claimed was infallible against all snake-poisons, but as this was never injected, only poured into the wounds, Burger doubts its neutralizing many years Morrisey had sys-tematically immunized himself. The book excels in the variety of its adventures and makes firstrate reading.

Basher lay wearily in his dressing-room. One eye was completely closed and his nose felt all over the place. In fact, he had had the hiding of his life. Suddenly the door burst open and in dashed his manager "Cheer up: I've great news "What it is?" gasped the batered boxer.

GOOD DEAL AFTER ALL-Many New Yorkers have chuckled through the years at the thought that they bought Manhattan from the Indians for only $24. But Ben Red Hill, centre, an

Charles K. Luke, bears no grudge. After struggling with these glass doors in a cafeteria, the Indians will be happy to leave New York to the cliff dwellers.

four companions, all plucky and pretty teenagers, made a rush for the man in their pyjamas. As ne slipped on the polished floor, they sat on him until help came. Some nurses at a South London hospital, set a neat — and sticky — booby trap for a Peeping Tom. Worried by the man's attentions, they decided to scare him off. They knew the tree into which he climbed to spy through their hostel windows. They discovered, in fact his exact perching place and, in daylight fixed In a more desperate emer-gency, a yung South African girl, Carol Cuttleway of Tur-fonteim, found herself atacked by a rogue baboon just as she was getting into her car. drove a few yards.

Then a brilliant idea occurred to her: the fire extinguisher. She stopped the car, seized it, swung round, and gave the gaping ba-boon the works — a mouthful of chemical foam. He hopped over the side at once and she drove away unscathed. Resourcefulness in times of danger is known to be no mascu-line prerogative. In a Displaced Persons camp near Munich welfare worker was confronted by a hysterical mother. "I've locked my two children in a girl on duty at Leeds City Sta-tion trapped her man by a boldly unorthodox leap. At her chal-lenge, the quarry, a notorious room and set it alight! It's burning now! We've no food!" she screamed. The welfare worker, a young French girl, Marie Anjouin, at once called a Hungarian refugee to help her and rushed to the hut. Smoke was pouring from its window. Inside, she heard cries and moans.

Marie wrenched the window open and, as smoke cascaded out, ordered the Hungarian to hoist her into it. Choking with smoke, she gathered up the two terror-stricken children, snatching one from the very edge of

At that split second, with remarkable agility, the police girl leap-frogged on to him, clung to his neck and pulled him to the ground. Resourcefulness pays, particularly in war time, when many a girl agent owed her life, and the safety of her circle, to her quick thinking. A French - Canadian agent, known as Jolette, was coming out of a restaurant in Rochelle, France, when two plain-clothes members of the Gestapo stopped "You will accompany us for interrogation at once" they ordered curtly. On her she carried a note reporting German troop locations and equipment — it was only a few weeks before D-Day - to the local Resistance movement. It would be fatal, she knew, for her to be taken with that vital information. "You must permit me first to buy myself some new stockings," she said, showing them a ddered stocking on a shapely leg. "Herr Commandant," she added, "will not wish to see me ... incorrectly dressed." The police escorted her to a near-by shop and watched her closely while she seelcted an expensive pair. But they never guessed that the secret message had safely crossed the counter along with her purchasing francs!

CURB SERVICE—The problem of squeezing into tight parking spaces is made simple with new device called the "Sidler" invented by engine expert Archie Butterworth of Frimle) Green, Surrey, England. To park a car equipped with the invention, the driver steers the front end into the curb. At the press of a dashboard button, a hydraulic undercarriage with two rubber discs (arrows) is lowered, raising the rear wheels from the ground. Powered by the car's transmission, the disks spin and move the car sideways into the parking space

Low gear swings the rear one way, and reverse the other.
