

KATE AIKEN SAYS GOOD-BYE TO RADIO

On June 28th, after 23 years of broadcasting, Kate Aiken, Canada's first lady of the microphone, said good-bye to radio.

She has had tea with Sir Winston Churchill, enjoyed a glass of sherry with Earl Ailes in his own home, interviewed world-famous figures like Roosevelt and Margot Fonteyn, and hunched over bread, beer and cheese in the British House of Commons with Ernest Bevin.

One of her finest memories is the day she was presented to the Queen, then Princess Elizabeth, during her visit to Toronto in 1951.

Announced that she was ready for the weiners and the feast would soon be on. Dory searched intensely among the packed picnic baskets and outdoor weiner roaster away up at Turkey Point.

KNOW YOUR Canada

Who was "The Human Dynamo"? The world's fastest human on skates in his day, Charles Ingraham his name.

How Did Canada's First Victoria Cross Hero Win His Award? At the furious fighting that marked the relief of Lucknow in 1857 during the Indian Mutiny a young Nova Scotian, William Edward Hall, volunteered to serve at an exposed position and fired the shot that breached the enemy's defences.

How Did Bracebridge, Ont. Get Its Name? The Town of Bracebridge, Ont. was named by the postmaster general of Canada, the angler who was sure he had hooked a big fish.

HAPPY HOLIDAYS The charms of Canada's countryside again beckon tired city dwellers. Thousands are busily scanning newspaper summer reads and advertisements.

CANADA'S BOUQUET

The mountain rose, a creamy-white rock flower which blooms in the north, has been chosen as the growing Northwest Territories as its official floral emblem.

Ontario chose the white trillium in 1937. After that, says Dr. Rousseau, people began picking trilliums with such abandon that the blums were forced to legally protect their flowers.

Five cabinet portfolios were still vacant when the cabinet held meetings during Mr. Diefenbaker's absence in London.

Important Increase

Recent figures compiled in Ottawa give a clear picture of the impact of post-war immigration on Canada's economic and cultural life.

Putting it another way the number of immigrants who have arrived in the last 11-2 years is equivalent to the population of either of the two largest cities, Toronto and Montreal.

In terms of provinces, the post-war immigration figure exceeds by more than 50,000 greater Canada's total population.

Immigrants have been responsible for the establishment of many new businesses and industries. The immigration department describes this contribution to the economy as "sizeable."
