ANNE HIRST Your Family Counselor

HASTY BRIDE OFFENDS-HER HUSBAND LEAVES

"Dear Anne Hirst: My husband and I have been separated for the past few weeks, and we've only been married a short time! One day while I was out, he packed his things and went home. We dated a whole year before we married, and now I know I made many mistakes before and after. From what he says, my greatest offense was to say at different times that I didn't really need him.

"Believe me, I'd rather have bitten my tongue out. I spoke in anger but he denies that, and insists I meant it. I am sure he was in love when he left; how could he stop loving me in a few weeks' time? I have begged him to come home, and he flies into a rage. (He flatly refuses to go to a

HELP NEEDED" ANOTHER CHANCE?

What you said was almost unforgivable, and a new husband could take it as an insult. You offended your man cruelly. Your careless remarks that you did not need him came like a stab in the heart; they confused him utterly, made him feel inadequate and unwanted. He must have felt he had received a nortal wound, and from his bride of a few weeks. Time is the only remedy for the state he is in. It is almost inconceivable that when his anger cools and he can rationalize things, he will not accept your explanation. Even the most arrogant male should not refuse to listen to a wife who is sincerely repentent. If you feel you must keep * in touch, write him a letter assuring him of your deep remorse and your humiliation that you offended him so. Tell him you realize now how much you do need him, and if * he will come home you will prove it. The first year of marriage is * said to be the hardest. The necessary adjustments are emotionally wracking; cruel words are spoken, and immediately regretted. Yet no matter how great the offense, not one of us has the right to deny * another the opportunity to make a fresh start. . . .

CONFESS HER AGE? "Dear Anne Hirst: I am very inhappy, for I had to lie about my age and said I was two years older. Now I have found someone I like, and I don't know how to tell him; I'm so afraid one of my friends will! Two weeks ago he said he'd call me some time, but he didn't. "I was over to see his mother, and I guess he was uneasy with me there, for he went out. His mother and I are good friends, but even she doesn't know how old I am. I am afraid to tell him. Please answer my problem. UNHAPPY ONE" Only during the teen years properly be called "the joys of being a grandmother". Or maybe I should say grandparents as Partner is having his share too in looking after seventeenmonths-old Eddie, who is staying with us awaiting the arrival of a baby sister — we hope! David, when the time comes, will be going to stay with Aunt Joy and Uncle Bob. We were only too willing to have Eddie here but we were also a little apprehensive as he had never been away from his mother at all, not even for a day, so we wondered how well he would adjust. However he has accepted grandma as a fairly good substitute for mother and so far we have managed to get along quite well. He is naturally a happy little fellow, reminding us very much of his mother when she

The kitchen floor is somewhat patchy where milk has been spilt and hastily wiped up. There are smears and smudon the picture windows and the television screen. Door handles are apt to be a trifle sticky, all of which are minor details, easily remedied. Just well, happy and reasonably good rector of the new church safety activities division of the National Safety Council, said in Portland recently that motorists ought to drive as though "God is in the front seat with you." We have ridden with people who drive that way, only they figure that with God on hand, nothing can happen to them no matter what they do.

This, of course, is not what Kenna meant. If one senses the presence of God, his manners and. behavior will be different than if God is out of mind. Manners and behavior behind automabile wheels have a lot to do with whether thousands of people live or die every year. Kenna and his division of the NSC are working on the moral approach to safety. "We want people to take their religious convictions, whether they be Catholic, Protestant or Jew, and apply them to driving behavior at work and even walking."

in such a crusade, believing that it can cut accidents and deaths as much as one third. "Anything that has to do with human behavior is a moral consideration and quite properly belongs to the churches," says Kenna.

There ought to be a fertile field here, for we have not noticed that persons who have high standards of conduct on most matters apply these standards to automobile driving. Included among those who fail on this score are at least some ministers, who feel that their tight schedules impel them to step on the gas. And there is the lay "pillar" of the church who quietly tells about having tried out his new car on a straight stretch, getting the needle up to 100 miles an Unfortunate.y, many "solid citizens," including those who are faithful in religious matters, fail to see that religion and morality have anything to do with automobile driving. But religion ought to have a bearing on every facet of life It ought to make a difference in how people behave under all circumstances. This should include automobile driving and, as we said before, this can have a lot to do with whether thousands live or die. - Oregon Journal

Yet most of his fights — in-eluding his title fight — were faked, and after his sensational exposure by Burns, shocked sportsmen dubbed O'Brien the "fixed fight champion." In his pre-arranged victories his opponents sacrificed honor for the money O'Brien offered them to lay down.

Until he tangled with Burns, his opponents were afraid to ex-pose O'Brien. So he posed as a victorious pugilist and claimed honors which never should have

But when he met Tommy Burns, O'Brien met his match in shrewdness. Burns crossed and doublecrossed him when they fought for the second time in Los Angeles on May 8, 1907. It was obvious that something was in the wind when Burns' manager called off all bets before the fight. O'Brien was the 10 to 7 favorite.

After the fight, when Burns had soundly beaten O'Brien, the fans who had bet on the Philadelphian were jubilant, because they'd saved their money. But those who had favored Burns

"Jack O'Brien was caught in "one of his own traps," said Burns: "I could not get him to agree, to enter the ring until agree, to enter the ring until after I had promised to lay down and let him win the fight. I pretended to be willing to do this, because I wanted to show the country that I was O'Brien's the country that I was O'Brien's fights too, and even declared that his first encounter with Burns the previous November had been fixed to end in a draw. This was probably true, for in their second fight, when Burns refused to carry through the fake, he completely outclassed O'Brien.

Born in Philadelphia in January 1878, O'Brien's real name was Joseph Hagan. He started his career in the ring when he was 18, but it was years before he did anything noteworthy. He he did anything noteworthy. He struggled along like any second-rater. No one took him seriously. Then he went to England, beat a lot of hams, made himself

Overdose Of Fear Writing in Life magazine not long ago, Dr. George Crile, Jr., surgeon at the Cleveland clinic, charged that those responsible for telling the public about disease have "chosen to use the weapon of fear, believing that only through fear can the public be educated." "Newspapers and magazines have spread this magazines have spread this fear," he went on, "knowing that the public is always interested in the melodramatic and the frightening."

This observation is particular ly pertinent now in regard to the wide publicity being given Asian influenza and the predictions that a vast epidemic is inescapable this winter. The fact that certain California health experts recently declared that there was no reason to expect an epidemic seems to have been ignored in favor of the more "meiodramatic and frightening"

Dr. John T. Barrett, chairman of the Rhode Island state committee on immunization, says that the publicity on Asian flu is "totally out of proportion with the danger involved." At worst, this latest "popular ailment cannot be compared with the type of influenza prevalent in 1917-18." Psychosomatic medicine emphasizes the harmful effects of fear and anxiety and echoes Job's statement that "the thing I greatly feared is come upon me." Disease is not a matter of germs and viruses only. Efforts toward immunization through vaccine are commen dable but that is not the sole means of immunization. Many centuries ago the Psalmist said: Because thou hast made the Lord, which is my refuge, even the most High, thy habitation: there shall no evil befall thee neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling."
